Summerlike weather entered southeastern Pennsylvania midweek, just in time for some fieldwork, fence installation and repair, and other farm chores. This youngster was taking care of fieldwork on Tuesday near Maple and Peace roads in Leola.

Pennsylvania Agricultural Statistics Service reports, for the week ending April 13, very poor conditions for fieldwork, with only one suitable day. Soil moisture was rated 44 percent adequate and 56 percent surplus. Principal farm activities included hauling and spreading manure, caring for livestock, preparing machinery for tillage and planting, applying fertilizer, fixing fences, attending farm meetings, and completing tax returns.

Weather patterns have been in a seesaw-like stage, with cold weather on the heels of summerlike conditions. The previous week brought a return of winter weather, with below-average temperatures, snow and rain. Most farmers were unable to do much in the way of cultivating fields or planting.

The percent of spring plowing complete remained unchanged at 8 percent, 37 percent behind last year's pace and 26 percent behind the five-year average.

LEESPORT (Berks Co.) — In 1894, Rudolf Diesel designed the first diesel engine to run on peanut oil.

"The use of vegetable oils for engine fuels may seem insignificant today," Diesel said in the early 1900s. "But such oils may become in the course of time as important as petroleum and the coal tar products of the present time."

Today, after a century of burning petrolem-based diesel to power much of the world's industry and transportation, Diesel's first idea of using vegetable oils may be coming into its own.

HARRISBURG (Dauphin Co.) — A simulated tractor rollover incident helped to unveil a program to promote agriculture rescue training on Monday at the Harrisburg Area Community College.

The initiative, dubbed the PAgricultural Rescue Training Program, features training for fire, rescue, and emergency medical service (EMS) personnel. The training, organizers hope, will help local emergency services be better prepared to handle on-farm emergencies.

The program's curriculum is written by Davis Hill, EMT-P, farm emergency management specialist. The Pennsylvania Department of Agriculture (PDA) has partnered with the Agricul-

Lamb, Goat Sales Signal Easter Season

MILLIE BUNTING
Market Staff

NEW HOLLAND (Lancaster Co.) — Easter Season is the reason for extra large marketings of lambs and goats here in the county. Lambs were also in good demand for the Jewish Passover observance which began at sundown Wednesday.

At the New Holland Sales Stables, in the past 10 days, 5,058 sheep and 5,611 goats for a total of 10,669 were sold at four auction sales. That is not a four-day record, set at 11,797 in 2001. On that date, the Christian Easter and Eastern Orthodox (Greek) Easter occurred on the same day, along with the observances of Passover and the Islamic New Year.

Ken Smoker, manager of New Holland's sheep and goat divison, said Monday's sale was probably a one-day record for both sheep and goats since 2,312 lambs and 2,034 goats were sold for total of 4,346 head. There were 2,436 goats sold Monday, April 7, at New Holland, not a record. The sheep numbers for that day were 1,717 for a combined total of 4,153.

For the past three years, to reduce the overcapacity receipts that have occurred, New Holland has scheduled a special sale the Saturday before Palm Sunday. This year on that day, 472 sheep and 382 goats were sold. But on Monday, the sheep and goat arrivals were staggering.

In the small livestock sales office, Barbara Riehl has capably handled the sales chores for years, even before the use of computers, which was quite fortunate since they were "down." Roger Floyd, retired office manager, and Barb quickly had to revert to the "old ways" to cope with the swarms of buyers and sellers.

The sale got under way only a few minutes later than the posted 9 a.m. start time in the old-fashioned way with a clerk, Roger Floyd; an auctioneer, Dale Stoltzfus; and a ring man, Tom Sharpe. However, it wasn't long before the computer system was up and running and the monitors above the ring were providing data on the offerings and the sale prices. Randy Arnold also took over auctioneering duties throughout the day.

It was to be a very long day for all the company's personnel. The goat sale ended about 5 p.m. and a "break" was declared before the lamb sale would begin. Smoker said the lamb sale did not end until 2:15 a.m. Tuesday. Some of the workers had put in more than a 24-hour day.

Since Easter is occurring relatively late this year, there did not seem to be as many very young lambs in the pens and the incessant "baa-baa-ing" that observers heard the last two years in New Holland's "short legs" building. The weather was warmer this year and an "old-timer" noted there's more crying when it's very cold, as it was last year. The previous week during the April

Easter Season

snow storm, there was a lot of noise in the pens.

The "Greek" Easter is next Sunday, April 27, and a large run of lambs is expected at New Holland this coming Monday. Adding those receipts and those of Thursday, April 17, there may be a seasonal record number of sheep and goat marketings established at New Holland.

The sheep and goat sales at New Holland have attracted shippers from at least 24 states. Although many animals are slaughtered by the small volume packers in Pennsylvania, the majority of the animals are shipped out-of-state for slaughter. They are trucked to New Jersey, New York, Massachusetts, Connecticut, and Rhode Island.

There have always been an influx of lambs at the auctions at Easter and Passover time, but there were certainly not many meat goats years ago. Many of the goats were bought for lawn trimmers. Some might recall (with mixed feelings) that the animals at the Lancaster Stockyards were bought for youngsters. Years ago, children became quite excited about their "gift" of an Easter goat.

New arrivals at the New Holland Sales Stables about 8:30 Monday morning are not interested in being herded into a holding pen for the Easter trade. They did not get sold until after 5:30 p.m., since more than 2,000 goats were sold from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m.

A pen of sheep and lambs are being moved from a holding pen to be readied for the sales ring Monday evening at New Holland's small livestock sales barn.

For the last 12 years, Smoker noted, meat goat receipts have increased along with the numbers of mideastern Islamic groups in the eastern metropolitan areas. Yearly goat marketings now outnumber sheep.

According to Julie Kyle, secretary for more than 25 years at the USDA market news office in New Holland, for the year 2002, sheep receipts at New Holland Sales Stables totaled 67,760 and goats numbered 80,726.

Many fenced-in goat feedlots can be seen throughout the region and surrounding states. Some believe this may be one area of the livestock business that will not yield to contract feeding or direct marketing any time soon.

Who are the auctioneers that fill the pages of Lancaster Farming? You can find out who they are and what they do in the June 21 premier issue of the 2003 Lancaster Farming Auction Directory booklet. Scheduled will be auctioneer listings, frequently asked questions and answers regarding auctions, and feature articles and photos. Don't miss it!

Taking Care

Curing What Your Parents Gave You

How to improve the quality & length of your life when you suffer from genetic disease

There's a lot of press these days about how genetics relate to disease Everyone is busy looking for that miracle drug to cure what their parents supposedly gave them But they fail to see that the true miracle is right before our mouths - healthy food works wonders on your genes!

Popular trends tell you to blame your health or lack of it solely on your genes But research has found that the vast majority of ill health and disease is not inherited Instead, it's directly related to environmental factors, or how you live your life But often times, how mom and pop lived their life is how you continue to live yours - hence the continuation of what appears to be 'genetic' health issues

The good news is genetic tendencies CAN be changed with proper diet and nutrition. There are 50 genetic diseases that can be remedied or improved with proper dietary supplementation

For example, only five percent of breast cancer incidences are related to genetic factors, whereas the traditional lifestyle factors account for the rest - estrogen exposure through hormone replacement therapy along with poor diet and inadequate physical exercise In fact, inherited genetic factors are a minor contributing factor to most cancers in humans

So if you have a genetic condition - even a significant one, take heart and know that lifestyle remedies are still available for your future health and they are very successful

One easy change you can begin making in your life right now is to restrict your calorie intake without lowering the amount of nutrients you consume In other words, reduce refined foods like flour and sugar, as well as refined fats like most vegetable oils

You're probably wondering how to actually do this .what will you eat instead of donuts in the morning or cookies for an after-school snack? What will "fill you up"? Or you may be frustrated because you tried all along to eat well and exercise and do the right things, but you still got a bad health report Let me tell you, I understand!

There are so many conflicting messages in the media today none more than nutrition! One day they'll say a certain food causes high cholesterol and then the next week you'll read an article saying it's beneficial for other conditions These days it seems everything causes cancer! Who can you believe? It's almost enough to make you stop trying and just eat whatever you want! Don't do it! that is the worst option!

If you truly desire to make smart food choices for you and your family, but have no idea how or what reports to believe, then attend our free nutrition workshop on April 24th at 7 p.m. I guarantee you'll learn something you didn't know before We'll teach you how to make sense of the food packaging and labels (which are full of marketing jargon) and 'see through' many of these so-called 'studies' on nutrition so you can make the best choices for you Plus we'll have a feast of healthy goodies for you to sample!

The workshop is free and open to the public, but seating is limited and it's our most popular workshop That means chairs fill up quickly - so reserve your spot! Just call 336-8110 or complete and mail the registration form below

Biodiesel In Pa.?

In the U.S., some biodiesel is already being produced from soybean and other vegetable oils and used by farmers and a number of public agencies. Most of this biodiesel comes from the West and Midwest and is usually blended with #2 diesel at a rate of 2 or 20 percent (B2 and B20, respectively).

While some farmers and small entrepreneurs make biodiesel on their own, there are only about 10 commercial-scale plants in the country, according to Mike Gerhart, an economic consultant with the Regional Economic Development District Inititative (REDDI) based in Harrisburg.

"There's a little biodiesel coming into Pennsylvania — not a lot," Gerhart said.

REDDI is in the early planning stages of bringing a biodiesel-producing plant to the area. On Wednesday, planners hosted the first of a series of meetings to describe the process and hear the input of farmers and other interested parties. Another meeting is set Monday, April 21, at the USDA Service Center in Gettysburg.

Russ Montgomery, REDDI president, said the group is looking for farmers to join the steering committee guiding the project.

"We can't do any of this without farmers," Montgomery said. "We want the farmers to be at the table."

Mike Shearer of Hershey Equipment is one of the leaders in the new initiative to help create better markets for area farmers by making renewable, environmentally friendly biodiesel out of soybeans.

In the good crop year of 2001, Pennsylvania produced 17 million bushels of soybeans on 400,000 acres — an average of 43 bushels per acre, Shearer said. In last year's drought, the number dropped to a total of 11 million bushels at 28 bushels to the acre.

About 9.5 million bushels of soybeans per year would be required to supply a biodiesel facility producing 10 million gallons a year — the plant size REDDI is considering, at least initially.

According to Montgomery, the biodiesel project would be "starting small at 10 million gallons."

Shearer said soybean markets for area farmers were hurt considerably by the collapse in June 2001 of an Archer Daniels Midland (ADM) pier on the Port of Baltimore, where much of the local soybean crop was taken for export. After negotiations failed with the Maryland Port Authority for restoration of the pier, ADM discontinued operation of the grain elevator on the site, effective March 1.

That means most soybeans leaving the area now go to the south and to poultry operations on Maryland's Eastern Shore.

"It's not cheap to move the beans down there," Shearer said.

Russ Montgomery, left, and Mike Gerhart are part of an economic development team that is initiating a biodiesel project in southcentral Pennsylvania.

REDDI plans to initiate a feasibility study on the economic potential of two types of biodiesel plants in the area.

One possible type of plant would include an oilseed crushing facility to extract the oil from soybeans, producing feed-quality soybean meal as a by-product. Construction costs for such a plant would be about $25-30 million.

A second possibility, costing about $10 million to build, would be a plant in which all the soybean oil is purchased, and no oil extraction is done on the site.

While the plant with a crushing facility is nearly three times as expensive to build, it would be likelier to use local soybeans, according to Gerhart. Additionally, the soybean meal produced as a by-product could be used to feed the region's livestock.

According to Shearer, 420,500 tons of soybean meal are consumed annually in Pennsylvania. Soy hulls are another valuable by-product.

The feasibility study would evaluate supply and demand for feedstocks and products, provide analysis of key governance and management issues, and make specific recommendations for a biodiesel plant in Pennsylvania.

REDDI hopes to have a consulting firm hired to perform the study in time to have the results by early next year.

Many plants in western states use hexane, a solvent made from petroleum, to extract the oil from soybeans, a process that is "efficient but not environmentally friendly," Shearer said. He noted that the Pennsylvania Department of Environmental Protection would probably not allow the process in the state, but would approve of a crushing facility.

Soybeans are made up of 12 percent oil and 78 percent meal, along with hulls, moisture, and other components. Pure soybean oil contains other compounds, including glycerol that is used in the pharmaceutical industry.

Converting the oil to an approved biodiesel requires a methane separation process that removes the glycerol and gums from the oil.

While many types of vegetable oils, including peanut and canola, can be converted to biodiesel, soybean oil is the most cost-effective, according to Shearer.

Brian Peifer, a diesel mechanic from the Oley area, makes biodiesel from kitchen waste oil salvaged from local restaurants.

Brian Peifer, a mechanic from the Oley area, was in attendance at the meeting Wednesday at the Berks County Ag Center. He said he and his son have been producing biodiesel from waste kitchen oil obtained from local restaurants. He said he has tried the product in diesel engines, with good results.

Maryland & Virginia Co-Op Names Outstanding Young Cooperators

RESTON, Va. — Timmy and Tammie French from Woodstock, Va., were named Outstanding Young Cooperators at Maryland & Virginia Milk Producers' YC Conference last month in Hampton, Va. The award recognizes the cooperative's outstanding young members who are committed to the dairy industry and who are active in dairy and farm organizations.

The Frenches manage Skip-A-Dale Farm, where they milk 95 Jerseys and Holsteins and farm 200 acres. They are both equally involved in a variety of dairy and agricultural activities and received the Cooperative Leadership Award from the Virginia Council of Farmer Cooperatives last year. They have two sons, Tyler and Tabb, and are expecting a third child in May.

First runners-up were Tom and Terry Lam from Bridgewater, Va. The couple milks 140 cows and farms 600 acres on South Bound Holsteins, the dairy portion of Walnut Grove Farm, Tom's family turkey, beef and dairy cattle operation. Tom was a national finalist in the Young Farmers Association's Spokesperson for Agriculture Contest. Terry was a high school agriculture and FFA adviser for six years and received the 2002 Outstanding Young Teacher Award from the Virginia Association of Ag Educators. The Lams have a one-year-old daughter, Cassidy.

Second runners-up were John and Mary Goodwin from Orange, Va. They operate a 1,600-acre 100-cow dairy farm in partnership with John's father. John was named the "Cooperative Young Farmer of the Year" by the Virginia Council of Farmer Cooperatives. Mary works for Orange-Madison Cooperative Farm Service and was named the Outstanding Virginia State 4-H Dairy Leader. The Goodwins have two sons, John Waller and Robert Byrd.

All six winners are Virginia Tech graduates and will be attending the National Milk Producers Federation Annual Meeting and YC Conference in New Orleans, La., in November. The Frenches will also attend the Washington Conference sponsored by the National Council of Farmer Cooperatives in Washington, D.C. in June. In addition to the national conferences, the Frenches will have the opportunity to attend Maryland & Virginia's board meetings this year.

Participants were evaluated on their dairy career progress, communication skills, cooperative knowledge, and organizational activities based on an application, interview and prepared comments about an industry issue. The Frenches discussed political action committees; the Lams discussed dairy promotion; and the Goodwins discussed estate tax repeal legislation.

Somerset County Dairy Producers Receive Price Information

SANDRA LEPLEY
Somerset Co. Correspondent

SOMERSET (Somerset Co.) — Ken Bailey, professor at the Department of Ag Economics and Rural Sociology at Penn State University, didn't paint an overly optimistic picture for Somerset County dairy farmers during the recent Dairy Day here at the Oakhurst Tea Room near Somerset.

However, Bailey stressed that dairy farmers need to be on top of issues and pro-active when it comes to milk prices.

"This year's going to be rough economically. It may take more time to turn around for the dairy industry," said Bailey. "What's not going to work is sit around and wait. If you wait, you take what the market will give you."

Bailey served as the main speaker for this year's Dairy Day. His speech was entitled "Milk Outlook and Policy Changes: What Do the Price Supports and New Pricing Formulas Mean to You?"

According to Bailey, most of the market relies on supply and demand. He also related that other states are adding dairy herds in number. In the past year, the state of California has added 60,000 cows alone.

"If we lose 5,000 cows here in Pennsylvania, they more than make up for it in the West. However, there is still a demand for milk in the East," he said.

Miguel Saviroff, extension agent for Somerset County, helped to organize the event and also served as a speaker concerning Venezuela markets. Saviroff is originally from Venezuela. He believes the farmers received invaluable information for their businesses during Dairy Day.

"This is a very important workshop," said Saviroff. "Farmers can come to this event and learn about broad and specific topics, and this year we are focusing on milk pricing and markets."

Jim Dunn, professor in the Department of Ag Economics and Rural Sociology at Penn State, served as another guest speaker. Dunn has traveled extensively to other countries and studied the markets. His topic was "Corn Markets: Has the Basis Gone Bananas?"

"Obviously, there is a lot of uncertainty, and we are in a worldwide recession," said Dunn. "Dairy is very much tied to the world economy and much of the rest of agriculture is as well. We are talking about a world market. Not just corn and milk, it's other things, like copper, that is a world commodity, and some of the prices have gone down the drain."

Dunn also discussed the North American Free Trade Agreement (NAFTA) and General Agreement on Trades and Tariffs (GATT) agreements.

"Dairy is largely a domestic market, but it could become an international market. Corn and beans are on the international market," said Dunn.

Harold Shaulis, president of the Somerset County Farm Bureau, believes that Dairy Day served as an extension of the business.

"Farming is an educational practice," he said. "No matter how long you have been in business, you can always learn something else. We are going forward, not backward. It's a two-way street. Not only can we learn, but presenters can learn what's going on in the farming community at large."

Hunsbergers To Host Farm Safety Day

SANDRA LEPLEY
Somerset Co. Correspondent

DAVIDSVILLE (Somerset Co.) — This year's Somerset County Farm Safety Day is scheduled from 10 a.m. to 2:30 p.m. next Saturday, April 26, here at the William Hunsberger Farm.

Hunsberger's farm was originally owned by the founder of Johnstown, Joseph Johns, who is buried on the farm's cemetery.

Last year Farm Safety Day was conducted at the Berlin Community Grove and focused on safety for children on farms. This year the emphasis is on "A Day That Could Save Your Life," which will encompass general farm safety for the whole family.

"Our primary purpose is to avoid accidents on the family farm," said Miguel Saviroff, extension agent for Somerset County. "If we can help just one person, then the event was worthwhile."

The Somerset County Farm Safety Coalition and Penn State Cooperative Extension in Somerset are sponsoring the event.

During the day, different workshops will be held for children, including bike safety, fire safety, storm safety, PTO entanglement, and first aid.

The adult workshops will include PTO entanglement, a tractor rollover demonstration, chemical/sprayer safety, extrication from machinery, and first aid.

Special attractions are all-terrain vehicle safety from 10 a.m.-10:30 a.m. and the Med-Star Helicopter from Conemaugh Hospital in Johnstown will be arriving sometime between 1:30 p.m.-2:15 p.m.

Conemaugh Connection from Conemaugh Hospital will be doing hearing tests and blood pressure screenings in the afternoon.

Penn State continues to be an educator of farm safety issues, mainly through Dr. Dennis Murphy, who is known on an international basis, and also through strong interest from the state's department of agriculture. Penn State has several farm safety demonstrations to extension offices and ag high school classrooms every year.

For Bill Blough of the Jennerstown area, president of the Somerset County Farm Safety Coalition, a simple mistake on his family farm in 1967 radically changed his life forever.

"It could have been worse, but the power takeoff shaft pulled my arm in up to the shoulder," said Blough. "It was a cold day, Dec. 16, and the shaft was frozen fast to the cover when I put my hand on it."

That simple mistake caused Blough to lose his right hand, and he now uses a hook to maneuver.

"It takes only a second," said Blough. "An ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure. This year's farm safety day will include personal safety and family safety. Even if you don't get hurt, someone else in the family may, and it's important to keep the family together at that time."

Judy Rhoads, retired teacher from Maple Ridge Elementary School in the Somerset Area School District, will help coordinate this year's event. She is the wife of Allen Rhoads, a farmer in Jenner Township.

Lunch will be provided for registered participants. Registration is required. To register, contact Somerset County Cooperative Extension at (814) 445-8911.

"Accidents usually never happen on purpose," said Saviroff. "And, after they are over, most people realize how they could have been prevented. We want to create an awareness so farmers stop and think before they act."

Pa. Senate To Consider Nominee

HARRISBURG (Dauphin Co.) — The Pennsylvania Senate Agriculture and Rural Affairs Committee will conduct a public hearing to consider the nomination of Boyd E. Wolff to the Pennsylvania Milk Marketing Board (PMMB).

The hearing is scheduled for April 23 at 10:30 a.m. in Room 8EA of the Capitol Building in Harrisburg.

Administration Launches Website

WASHINGTON, D.C. — The Bush Administration has launched EarthDay.gov, a Website that provides Americans a comprehensive guide to environmental service opportunities and Earth Day events sponsored by the federal government, including events hosted by USDA agencies.

The site is the first interagency effort to create a comprehensive federal resource for citizens who want to participate in Earth Day and other year-round environmental activities.

335 High School Students To Compete In Penn State Envirothon

BEDFORD (Bedford Co.) — The 20th Pennsylvania State Envirothon will take place at Penn State Mont Alto, near Chambersburg, Franklin County, Monday and Tuesday, May 19 and 20.

Approximately 335 high school students will compete in the areas of aquatics, forestry, soil and land use, wildlife, and current environmental issues. The environmental issue for this year's event is Farmland Preservation and Conservation.

County conservation districts from 67 of Pennsylvania's 67 counties are expected to sponsor teams to this year's competition. The county representatives will qualify for the statewide event by winning local Envirothon events involving over 15,000 youth from nearly 500 high schools across the Commonwealth.

Monday, May 19, teams will have the opportunity to participate in an Oral Component event as part of the Pennsylvania State Envirothon. At this time the oral component is voluntary; therefore, scores from this segment of the event will not be included in the team's overall score. Separate awards will be given to the top ten oral component teams. The station tests will take place on Tuesday, May 20.

The Pennsylvania Envirothon along with its partners — The USDA Natural Resources Conservation Service, Pa. Fish and Boat Commission, Pa. Game Commission, Pa. DCNR Bureau of Forestry and State Parks, the Pa. Department of Environmental Protection, and the Pa. Department of Agriculture — assure the continued success of the program. These committed partners provide educational reference materials for over 700 participating high school teams as well as technical expertise, knowledge, and manpower at not only the state event but also at 66 county events.

Pennsylvania's sixty-six county conservation districts, the State Conservation Commission and the Pennsylvania Association of Conservation Districts sponsor the Envirothon program.

Special project funding from the State Conservation Commission enabled the program to become established statewide in 1984. Corporate sponsorship continues to allow the Pa. Envirothon Board of Directors to ensure a quality event for all those who participate. The program's first corporate sponsor was the Hershey Foods Corporation from 1992-1997.

In 1997 the program secured corporate sponsorship from Air Products and Chemicals Inc. and the Pennsylvania Outdoor Writers Association. In 1999, the Pennsylvania Power and Light (PPL) Company became a sponsor. This year, the Nestle Water North America Inc. has joined the Envirothon as a corporate sponsor.

Pennsylvania's Growing Greener grant program has enabled the Envirothon to upgrade its website, develop and purchase education and outreach resources and tools as well as sustain the program.

Sponsors and partners of the program will present awards to the top ten teams. Station awards are also presented to the teams with the highest score in a specific area.

The winning team will represent Pennsylvania at the 2003 Canon Envirothon, which will take place in Emmitsburg, Md., on July 26-Aug. 1, on the campus of Mt. Saint Mary's College. The Pennsylvania Fish & Boat Commission and the Pennsylvania Game Commission provide grant funding to cover transportation and lodging for the five-member team and its advisors.

Pennsylvania Farm Bureau Asks PMMB for Premium Hearing

CAMP HILL (Cumberland Co.) — The Pennsylvania Farm Bureau (PFB) has petitioned the Pennsylvania Milk Marketing Board (PMMB) to conduct a hearing regarding the continuation of the over-order premium for Class I (fluid) milk.

Currently, the over-order premium is set at $1.55 per hundred pounds of milk. This represents a $1.40 premium, along with an extra 15 cents fuel adjustment. The premium is set to expire on June 30.

"We hope the board will schedule a hearing date in the near future, which would allow them sufficient time to consider and act upon the pricing issue before June 30," said PFB President Guy F. Donaldson.

"We know farmers continue to experience historically low prices and we would expect the board to consider continuing the premium at some level for the remainder of 2003," said Donaldson.

Since 1988, PMMB has mandated an over-order premium be added to federal order prices for Class I (fluid) milk produced, processed and sold within Pennsylvania's borders.

Weekly Dairy Market Outlook

caution that most of the variation in Class III prices over the last 10 years was as a result of big swings in milk production levels. Demand steadily increased because of strong growth in the U.S. economy. That is not the case now, because the economy is much weaker. Hence my conservative estimates.

What the market is looking for is some response in the milk supply to low milk prices. This would be a leveling off or reduction in the number of cows on farms. I have a number of contacts in the West who tell me that the month-after-month growth in cow numbers in the western half of the U.S. will begin to slow. Most have maxed out their cow facilities and milk production per cow. Others are facing steep losses, and financing for further expansions just may not be there.

Another factor that could really help is for the economy to show signs of improvement. The recent Coalition successes in Iraq will go a long way to improve consumer confidence, eradicate some of the terrorist threats that many would-be travelers face, and help Wall Street get back on its feet. Hopefully consumers will feel better about their lives and begin to spend more. A stronger economy will very likely translate into stronger spending on dairy products.

So, as you tear open you milk checks and look at the bottom line, remember, things will be improving. It's just a matter of how much milk prices will strengthen by the fall. My estimate of a Class III price peak of $11-$12 per CWT will be achievable if we have some reduction in cow numbers and a slight improvement in the economic outlook.

Next week I'll be reporting to you from Moldova, a tiny country sandwiched between Romania and Ukraine. I'll be doing some volunteer work there with a small dairy cooperative through the Citizen's Network for Foreign Affairs. If the technology works, I should be able to update my Website from the capitol city of Moldova.

Peifer said making the fuel is a simple process but is still viewed skeptically by farmers from the area.

"You talk to a local farmer about biodiesel and they look at you like you're from Mars," Peifer said.

According to Montgomery, an education process is part of REDDI's plan to promote biodiesel in the state. This would include more work teaching children in schools about alternative energy.

"It's proven technology," Shearer said.

REDDI covers an area including Franklin, Cumberland, Adams, York, Dauphin, Lebanon, Lancaster, and Berks counties, as well as part of northern Maryland. It helped launch a corn-based ethanol-producing facility, set to be built next year in Adams, York, or Lancaster counties. If completed on schedule, it will be the first ethanol plant in the Mid-Atlantic region, out of a total of 70 in the country.

Be Wary Of Thieves

Bob King, Ph.D.
Cornell Cooperative Extension
Monroe County

With spring upon us, farmers are starting to inventory anhydrous ammonia to use for their spring plantings, and a lot of would-be thieves know this. Without a doubt, these thieves are using anhydrous ammonia to make methamphetime, which is an illegal drug.

The manufacture and use of methamphetmine has exploded not just in rural areas but also in suburbs and urban areas.

Meth or what is also called crank or ice is a highly addictive drug that can be less expensive and easier to obtain than other illegal drugs.

Right now, meth is the drug of choice among rural communities and is also becoming the drug of choice in suburban and urban areas.

Drug use tends to be cyclical, and right now we're in a meth cycle. We don't see this going away any time soon. Until another illegal drug replaces it, its use will continue for quite some time.

Since April of last year, western and southern New York counties have received more than 300 reports of anhydrous theft and these thieves are persistent and innovative. Some desperate thieves have even flattened the front tires of tender tanks in order to drain the last little bit of anhydrous out of what most of us would consider an empty tank.

These thieves are decentralized and uncoordinated groups of both runners and manufacturers. They are desperate, reckless, and dangerous. Typically, thieves are armed and use state-of-the-art technology. And more often than not they have predetermined their targets and do a fair amount of organizing and planning before they strike.

Once they start stealing from a farm, they keep going back until the product runs out or they fear detection. That's part of the reason why we ask anyone in the community to report suspicious behavior. Most arrests involving anhydrous ammonia are because of someone reporting suspicious behavior.

We are not just concerned about the theft of the anhydrous ammonia, but we are also concerned about everything else that surrounds the theft of anhydrous.

If anhydrous is being stolen in your area, that means there is a roaming meth lab close by and drugs in your schools.

If you see suspicious activity on your farm or on a neighbor's property report it immediately. Don't take the matter into your own hands. These thieves are almost always under the influence of drugs, and they really don't care about the safety of others, let alone their own, so don't approach the activity or vehicle. Call law enforcement immediately.

Use farm security measures and report anything out of the ordinary or out of place. Communicate with your family, employees, and neighbors and encourage them to report any suspicious activity, too. Reporting suspicious activity is critical so that law enforcement has a clear picture of the scope of the problem and know where and what to look for.

Also keep your tanks in well-lit locations, preferably with motion sensor lights that can easily be observed by family and neighbors.

Avoid storing portable tanks in plain view, and keep them in an inconspicuous location to avoid detection by a passerby.

Keep an eye on your anhydrous inventory and, whenever possible, take a quick look at your storage tanks. If you get up at night, take a look.

Report any missing inventory and call law enforcement officials immediately regarding any suspicious activity or vehicles.

Locking a tank valve has proven to be a less than effective measure, because we have found that thieve will break the tank valve off, not only leaving you with a theft, but an environmental problem as well. Fencing or other physical barriers may bring greater success.

MIXED GREEN SALAD WITH CINNAMON PECANS

8 cups mixed salad greens
⅓ cup crumbled goat cheese
⅓ cup Cinnamon Pecans (see recipe below)
⅓ cup dried cranberries
3 tablespoons honey
¼ cup raspberry vinegar
3 tablespoons raspberry jam

½ cup sugar, reserving 1 tablespoon
2 teaspoons ground cinnamon
½ teaspoon ground ginger

When sugar is melted and pecans brown, remove from heat. In small bowl, mix together the remaining 1 tablespoon sugar, cinnamon, ginger, and nutmeg. Toss with pecans. Spread mixture on wax paper and cool for 20 minutes. Break up any clumps and store in zipper lock bag.

Featured Recipe

Ham and sweet potatoes are traditional Easter dinner favorites. Both dishes can be dressed up with pecans. Not only do pecans add an appealing aspect to your dinner entree, they also taste magnificent.

Pecans have no cholesterol and provide healthy monounsaturated fat, as well as dietary fiber, vitamin E, and magnesium.

But what's nutrition if taste appeal is missing? The good news is that almost everyone loves snacking on pecans. Try adding pecan crunch and flavor to soups, casseroles, baked goods, meats, vegetables, and fruits.

Pecans are easy to keep on hand to use whenever needed. Store shelled pecans in airtight containers for up to nine months in refrigerator or in the freezer for up to two years.

Here's a recipe that transforms an ordinary ham into one with pizzazz.

GLAZED HAM WITH PECAN CRUST

10-pound cooked ham, bone in
2 cups apple cider
1 cup light brown sugar
1 tablespoon Dijon mustard
1½ cups finely chopped pecans

Preheat oven to 325 degrees. Insert meat thermometer into center of ham without touching bone. Place ham baking dish and pour cider over it. Roast in oven, basting with cider every 30 minutes for 2 to 2½ hours (12-15 minutes per pound) or until thermometer registers 140 degrees. Meanwhile, in bowl, combine brown sugar, mustard and pecans.

Remove ham from the oven during the last 40 minutes and firmly pat the sugar pecan mixture all over the ham. Return to oven and continue roasting until crust is brown and ham is done.

Slice and serve with pan sauce, making it the perfect accompaniment to the ham. Makes 20-25 servings.

On Being a Farm Wife

(and other hazards)

Joyce Bupp

Orange eggs just don't cut it.

Orange is for heat, for shock value, for alert. Orange works for pumpkins and stunning vistas of October-frosted leaves. Orange is the juice many of us sip with breakfast or snacks. Orange is for safety, like life jackets and slow-moving-vehicle signs and traffic cones.

Orange is not for eggs.

Orange stirs alarms. It's near the top of the Homeland Security terror alert color-code alert system. Remember the notorious Agent Orange, linked to the Vietnam War and mysterious ailments lingering in the health of many veterans?

Orange turning up in those ubiquitious plastic eggs of the season just always seems strangly out of place. Orange has its own celebration at Halloween. This is Easter, we're talking tradition. So, bring on the soft, delicate, genteel pastels and the cherry, happy primary colors.

Like, yellow. What's more "Easter'y" than the hue of bright sunshine?

Yellow speckles the season, with daffodils dotting flowerbeds, brightening shady, shrubby nooks, and smiling from bouquets. Yellow are the flowers of forsythia, incredibly durable shrubs which tolerate just about any indignity of weather or pruning.

Yellow is cuddly baby chicks and baby ducklings, classic symbols of springtime and new life. Fortunately these fragile poultry infants are no longer handed out as freebies and souvenirs, but recognized for their unique need for specialized feed, housing and classic Tender Loving Care.

Yellow is a cluster of early tulips, nodding their heads on sturdy stems waving above waxy, elongated foliage. Yellow — sort of — is the color of Derra Dog's big, enthusiastic tail, wagging back and forth in happiness and whacking the dickens out of clusters of yellow daffodils and tulips.

Yellow — in its brightest, most stunning shade — is the color of dandelions. Even as the lingering snow was clinging to cool, shaded corners, dandelions were poking their sunshine blooms up between straggly clumps of grass on the lawn.

Not to forget pink, not quite as abundant as yellow, but stunningly beautiful in fat heads of fragrant hyacinths. Pink is a classic color for little girls to dress up in for their Easter finery, with shiny sashes, perky bows, lots of lace, and a stylish hat for the holiday.

Easter blues are clear and sharp, or toned with hints of lavendar. Blue hyacinths are the perfect foil for their pink kin. Bluebells or "bluebottles" as some folks call them are equally happy in neat clusters or scattered in a naturalized setting. A handful of tiny bulbs I planted probably three decades ago have repopulated themselves dozens of times over on a gentle slope behind the house. These four-inch-high scilla, or Siberian squills, are one of the earliest things to bloom in our yard. Their tiny, deep-blue blossoms on threadlike stems make a diminutive bouquet to tuck in a tiny vase on the kitchen counter.

Some Easter weekends, gentle weather has coaxed out the early red tulips, to add their bold primary punch to the delicate pastels, all set against a background of lush green. A treasured photo of our two grandsons harkens to an Easter weekend a few years back. For just a few moments of ro[illegible], they [illegible] bouquets, consisting of every tulip bloom on the place. We captured the moment on film and divided up the bouquets between two households to enjoy.

Though we don't usually associate brown with Easter, it plays a pivotal role in the season. Brown is the color of our rich soils, source of life and food, sponge to soak up and hold our precious resource of water. Soil is such a basic we rarely give it thought, but critical to our world's survival.

Brown is also the color of chocolate. Easter wouldn't be the same without a taste of brown, lusciously-sweet, chocolate rabbits.

We may have to rethink our Easter color priorities here.

Digging Out Of Debt

If you are feeling like you are being buried in bills, you are not alone.

Savings rates in the United States are well below historical averages while personal bankruptcy filings have doubled those of 10 years ago. A little more than a decade ago, Americans saved 8.8 percent of their after-tax income; today the personal savings rate is less than half that amount.

In addition to the lack of savings, the average U.S. household has credit cards with balances totaling more than $4,800. Debt as a share of after-tax income has been rising, with Americans devoting an average of almost 11 percent of their income to servicing consumer debt in the form of credit cards and automobile loans. The percentage of homeowners who are falling behind on their mortgage payments is growing, and delinquency rates as high as 5.6 percent have been reported on automobile loans.

Potential debt problems can be spotted before they reach the serious stage. By knowing what danger signals to look for, you can take steps to prevent a problem before it occurs. If any of the following signals look familiar, you may be headed for financial trouble.

- You think of credit as cash, not debt.
- Your debts are greater than your assets.
- You owe more than seven creditors.
- You are an impulsive or compulsive shopper.
- You and your spouse are dishonest with each other about your use of credit.
- You don't know how much your monthly living expenses are or the amount of your total debt.
- Your expected increase in income is already committed to paying off debts.
- You depend on extra income, such as earnings by a second person or over-time by the breadwinner to help you make ends meet.
- You have less than 2 months' take-home pay in cash or savings where you can get to it quickly.
- You have to pay back several installment payments that will take over 12 months to pay off.
- You have more than 20 percent of your take-home pay committed to credit payments other than your home mortgage.
- You get behind in utility or rent payments.
- You have to consolidate several loans into one or reduce monthly payments by extending current loans in order to pay your debts.
- You cannot afford to pay for regular living expenses or credit payments; therefore, you take out a loan, withdraw savings, skip payments, or pay only the minimum amount due on your charge accounts.

If you said yes to at least four of the above statements, examine your budget and look for ways to tighten your belt. If you checked five or more, you are probably headed for financial trouble. If you checked seven or more, then you are in financial danger.

If you are having serious financial trouble, you are probably having difficulty staying ahead of your bills. You can only cut expenses so much, so one often has no choice but to delay payment on certain debts. One of the most important choices you will have to make is which bills to pay first, which to pay later and which to refuse to pay. Often consumers pay items like credit card bills which do not urgently have to be paid, but their collectors often make the most 'noise."

If you are having trouble paying all of your bills, you should instead be paying those creditors who can "hurt" you the most, such as those who can take your home or car. Generally speaking, you should direct your limited resources to what is most necessary for your family — usually food, essential medical expenses, shelter and utility service. If you need your car to get to work, this payment should also be considered essential.

There is excellent free information available on dealing with debt.

Check with your local library or Cooperative Extension office for more information. But remember, the best thing you can do as a consumer is to realize a worsening situation and try to reduce spending and debt before you get too deep in debt.

No-Nonsense Solutions To Growing Obesity Problems

PHILADELPHIA — A new research review identifies several causes to the growing epidemic of childhood obesity, including lack of physical activity, large portion sizes, and increased intake of sugar-sweetened soft drinks. The authors propose a "common sense approach" to the prevention and treatment of childhood obesity that focuses on both the home and school environments. These steps include setting aside time for healthy meals and physical activity, eliminating unhealthy foods — such as soft drinks and candy — from school vending machines and possible taxes on fast food and soft drinks, to name a few. In addition, the authors suggest that soft drinks might be a possible culprit because of their ability to raise blood sugar, whereas milk, which has a low ability to raise blood sugar, may help protect young adults from becoming obese.

National Dairy Council® provides some no nonsense tips to help your child get adequate nutrition with foods they love:

- Yogurt Parfaits — Make breakfast time fun, quick, and easy for the kids. Let them add fresh fruit (such as blueberries, strawberries, or cut melon slices) to any flavored yogurt. Offer extra ingredients for texture such as raisins, granola, or their favorite cereal.
- Plan Your Menu — If your child(ren) dine in the school cafeteria, ask them to bring home the school lunch menu so that you can decide together what foods he or she will be choosing. You can't monitor them to make sure they eat all the vegetables, but you can help them to make their selections ahead of time.
- Set an Example — The most important thing parents can do to encourage their children to eat healthy is to show them! Provide healthy meal options at home — such as pastas with vegetables; lean meats and Parmesan cheese; milk with meals and lowfat yogurts and fruit for dessert. They are more likely to choose these foods if they see you doing so.
- Avoid Nutrient-Void Foods in Vending Machines — Encourage your child to grab a single-serve of milk or a serving of yogurt in the school lunch line instead of candy and soda from a machine. Also, talk to your child's school administration about their school's regulations on the availability of sodas and candy during school lunchtime.
- Take a Field Trip to the Grocery Store — Get your kids involved in selecting healthful food choices.

Consuming Thoughts

by

Fay Strickler

Penn State Extension
Home Economist for Berks Co.

With all the children looking forward to participating in egg hunts, the Easter bunny needs lots of help to get all the eggs cooked properly and safely.

There are just a few simple rules to follow that will help you to make perfectly prepared hard-cooked eggs without cracking the shell. These eggs will be ideal for dyeing, whether you use a "home brew" or a commercial dye.

The secret begins with the cooking of the eggs. To prevent egg breakage while cooking, use eggs that are four or five days old.

Place the eggs in a saucepan, in a single layer. Add tap water until the level is one inch above the eggs. Cover and bring just to boiling. Immediately turn off the heat and remove pan from the burner to prevent further boiling. Let stand, covered in hot water for 15 minutes for large eggs (12 minutes for medium; 18 minutes for extra large eggs). Immediately run cold water over eggs or place them in ice water until completely cooled.

Some people prefer to bring the water to a boil first, lower the eggs into the pan, and simmer about 12 minutes until cooked. This method is not recommended because the sudden change in temperature may causes the shells to crack.

Specially designed appliances use steam to hard-cook eggs. These appliances may differ in procedure according to brand, so be sure to follow the manufacturer's directions. Eggs usually take 14-17 minutes to cook this way. When removing eggs from the cooker be very careful. They are extremely hot and it is easy to burn your hands.

Frustration often occurs when egg shells don't pull of the egg without pulling some of the egg white with it. A University of Georgia study suggests a method designed to make peeling easier. The method calls for cooking the eggs as suggested and then plunging them into an ice water bath for a minute. Return eggs to a boiling bath for ten seconds before peeling. The ice water helps to shrink the membrane away from the shell, allowing the egg to be peeled more easily.

Transferring eggs to an ice water bath can also help prevent the green rings form forming around the yolks. Using a vegetable steamer or deep fry basket will make egg transfers easier.

Since fresh eggs can be tougher to peel, remember to use week-old eggs. When ready to peel, it helps to crack the egg shell all over by gently tapping it on a hard surface. Roll between your hands to loosen the shell and begin peeling at the large end. Dipping the egg in a cool water bath may help to ease the shell off.

Some people feel that salt added to the boiling water makes peeling easier, but there is no proof to this theory. If salt is used in cooking, pour water off as soon as the eggs are done. Shells are porous and eggs can absorb the salt.

Keep your decorated hard-cooked eggs fresh for later use by storing them in the refrigerator. An hour out of refrigeration for the morning Easter egg hunt and later, for another hour to use as a centerpiece during Easter dinner won't hurt. But if out of the refrigerator for an extended period of time it is suggested that you use eggs for decorative purposes only.

Hard-cooked eggs stored in the refrigerator will keep about one week in their shells. The original egg carton is the best storage container for hard-cooked eggs.

By following these simple rules, your decorated Easter eggs can be served as a safe nutritious post-Easter meal or snack.

The STREAM MAP OF OHIO resembles another map--known to Pennsylvania anglers as the "Lost Stream Map."

The "Stream Map of Pennsylvania" was completed in 1965 after a 30 year effort by Howard Higbee, a former Penn State Professor.

Professor Higbee succeeded in creating a map of the highest detail possible...a map that shows every stream and lake. He painstakingly plotted by hand, the location of 45,000 miles of streams onto a 3 by 5 foot map.

The map sold extremely well - until it was lost several years later. Incredibly, the printer entrusted with the original drawing and printing plates declared bankruptcy, then carelessly hauled Higbee's 30 years of work to the landfill.

The few remaining dog-eared copies became a prized fisherman's possession. Professor Higbee was offered $400 for one of his last maps. And state agencies were forced to keep their copies under lock and key.

The experts had always told Professor Higbee that reprints were impossible, because the maps were printed in non-photographic blue.

Then, in 1991, at the age of 91, Howard Higbee's dream came true. Computers made it possible to reprint the map. Holding an updated map, Howard said, "I never thought I'd live to see this day."

Then, by combining Professor Higbee's knowledge with computer technology -- the STREAM MAP OF OHIO was created.

State Alternate Dairy Princess Thrives On 'Busyness,' Humor

LOU ANN GOOD
Food And Family Features Editor

BLAIRSVILLE (Westmoreland Co.) — "I thrive on busyness," said 17-year-old Rachel Ebert.

Almost in the same breath, she adds, "I'm the oldest and have three brothers."

Their mischievous antics kept her scrambling when they were younger, but her brothers are now targeting their energy toward "picking up the slack."

This became necessary when Rachel was crowned Pennsylvania's alternate dairy princess last September. She embarked on a whirlwind tour of dairy promotion that requires her to crisscross the state many times to represent the dairy industry.

Her brothers, Josh, 14; Jonathan, 10; and Jacob, 8, enjoy being in the barns, and despite her exciting "new" life, Rachel said that she misses the barn work. Her parents Richard and Diane Ebert own the 395-acre Wil-Mar-Re Farm in partnership with Rachel's Uncle William and Aunt Martha. They raise 140 Holsteins with a 75-head milking herd.

Recently, they built a solar greenhouse barn for the calves. The sides raise up and down, and the bottom is sand covered. Rachel said the calves are much healthier because of the good air flow. Corn, soybeans, and alfalfa are raised on the acreage.

"I was never out of the area (Westmoreland) before. This is a completely different life for me, but I'm really enjoying it," she said.

Poised, articulate, and confident, Rachel recalls that her image is quite different than the one presented during the first milk toast she made during the All-American Dairy Show.

"I stuttered. I couldn't remember names," she said.

Despite her humility, Rachel impressed the audience during competition at the state pageant with her comical skit based on the popular television program "Blue's Clues." She received first place for the skit, and her answer to impromptu questioning showed that she indeed could perform under stress.

Her sense of humor played a role in capturing the audience and the judges' attention.

"I get my sense of humor from my dad," Rachel said.

That sense of humor injects a comfortable aura when traveling with Pennsylvania Dairy Princess Raechel Kilgore and Second Alternate Ashley Chapman.

"We share a lot of little inside jokes with each other," Rachel said.

Rachel's knowledge of the dairy industry was enhanced by serving as county dairy maid for three years. She's grateful for the assistance of one dairy maid in helping her with county promotions.

"I love being around people and talking — I'm always willing to answer questions," Rachel said.

"I've learned to appreciate not only people who work in the dairy industry but also many who are connected with it. It's given me a bigger picture of the dairy industry in the county, state, nation, and in the world."

At Derry Area High School, Rachel has been active in the varsity swim team, class play, the school musical, and filling an internship writing grants for high school classes.

In church, Rachel is active as a member of the youth group, Campaign for Human Development committee member, youth council for the Diocese of Greensburg, a lector, and altar server.

She also is active in the Sugarloaf 4-H Club. She owns nine dairy animals that she enters in competition at the Westmoreland Fair. Rachel has also served as a gardening volunteer at Keystone State Park and at a summer camp for kids.

Although it's sometimes a bit hectic to fulfill high school studies, Rachel is philosophical about the trade-off. She said, "I'm learning so much more — school will always be there."

After high school graduation, Rachel plans to pursue ag science and ag communications at Penn State.

"The hardest thing about being a dairy princess is learning to balance home and promotional responsibilities."

She's grateful for her brothers' willingness to assume her farm chores while she travels.

"Another great thing about being the only girl with three brothers is that I never had to share a room," she said.

CHEESE POTATOES

1 bag hash browns
16-ounces sour cream
½ cup butter
½ cup milk
2 cups shredded cheddar cheese
1 can cream of chicken soup

Place hash browns in 9x13-inch pan. In separate bowl, mix remaining ingredients. Spread mixture on hash browns, cover and bake at 350 degrees for 40 minutes. Serves 8-10.

Celebrating Rachel Ebert's coronation as First State Alternate Dairy Princess are her parents Richard and Diane Ebert and brothers, Josh, 14; Jonathan, 10; and Jacob, 8.

Calves are Rachel's forte on the family farm. She owns nine dairy animals.

"My sense of humor comes from my dad (Richard Ebert)," Rachel said.

Working in the barn isn't just feeding calves for this alternate dairy princess. Here she carries a bag of silage to the growing calves.

Milks Make Healthy Diets

• New research suggests that flavored milks may be an ideal weapon to help battle the widespread calcium deficiencies among children and teens. Researchers at the University of Vermont studied the beverage patterns of nearly 4,000 children and adolescents in this country. They found that those who drank flavored milk had a higher total milk intake and a lower soft drink and juice drink intake compared to the children who did not consume flavored milk. Drinking flavored milk helped increase their calcium consumption, but it did not increase overall added sugar or fat

• Researchers conclude that flavored milk can play a role in changing recent trends in children and teens' sugar-sweetened beverage intake and offer a nutritious alternative. Like unflavored milks, all versions of flavored milks provide about 300 milligrams of calcium per serving, or about one-fourth to one-third of the daily calcium recommendation.

• About nine of out 10 teenage girls and seven out of 10 teenage boys do not get the calcium they need — potentially setting the stage for the bone-crippling disease osteoporosis, which currently affects nearly 28 million Americans. Children and teens ages 9 to 18 need 1,300 milligrams of calcium, or about four 8-ounce glasses of milk a day, while children ages 4 to 8 need 800 milligrams, which is the equivalent of about three 8-ounce glasses of milk each day.

Create Chocolate Milk Specialties

In a microwave or small saucepan, heat 1 cup chocolate fat free skim or 1 percent lowfat milk until hot. Stir in one of the following:

• 1 teaspoon instant coffee crystals
• 2 or 3 peppermint or butterscotch hard candies, crushed
• 1 or 2 small chocolate-covered peppermint patties, broken up
• 1 tablespoon caramel or butterscotch ice cream topping
• Several shakes of ground cinnamon
• Several drops of peppermint, coconut, almond or vanilla extract

Or, start with one cup of milk, either hot or cold, and take your pick of fruit or dessert-flavored additions.

• A splash of vanilla, almond, or maple extract
• 1 tablespoon of fat-free fudge ice cream topping plus ¼ cup sparkling mineral water or club soda
• ½ cup fresh or frozen strawberries, pureed
• 2 tablespoons orange juice concentrate and ½ teaspoon vanilla extract
• 2 teaspoons instant malted milk powder and 1 teaspoon chocolate syrup
• ½ cup root beer and a small scoop of vanilla lowfat ice cream
• Pureed banana with ½ teaspoon honey and ¼ teaspoon vanilla extract
• 1 tablespoon chocolate syrup and a dash of cinnamon

Culinary Students Enter Original Veal Recipes In Third Annual Cook-Off

PITTSBURGH (Allegheny Co.) — Culinary students across the Commonwealth entered the third annual "Veal Cook-Off Challenge" this spring, with winners named at the Pennsylvania Restaurant Show, April 1 in Pittsburgh.

The Pennsylvania Beef Council sponsored the competition to encourage aspiring chefs to create veal center-of-the-plate entrees.

Professional chefs sifted through students' original entries judging recipes based on cooking methods and availability of cuts at retail.

The judges selected Chad Kolaric's Mediterranean Stuffed Veal Scaloppini with Wild Mushrooms in a Veal Glaze and Wendy Wagner's Veal Chops with Fennel and White Wine served with Tuscan Beans as contest finalists, with both students receiving $250 in prize money for their recipe.

Kolaric studies culinary arts at Harrisburg Area Community College; Wagner is a student at Le Cordon Bleu, Pittsburgh.

Kolaric and Wagner traveled to the Pennsylvania Restaurant Show in Pittsburgh to prepare their award-winning entries and compete for prizes in the "Best of Show" and "People's Choice" categories.

Andrew G. Iannacchione, CEC, AAC, consulting corporate chef for U.S. Foodservice Altoona/Greensburg/Freedom and Charlie Gipe, CEC, Giant Center executive chef, awarded Wagner's Veal Chop dish the "Best of Show," while Kolaric was the crowd favorite and garnered the "People's Choice" award.

Ida's Notebook

by

Ida Risser

Easter traditions are important to families. Each family probably adds something to the things that their parents did on that special Sunday morning.

On the Saturday afternoon before Easter we colored hard boiled eggs. Each child tried to have the prettiest egg. Even as my mother and grandmother colored eggs with dried onion skins so, I do too. They get unusual patterns and shades of orange, yellow, and brown.

I think the Easter bunny had as much fun hiding the baskets of Easter candy as the children did hunting them. They were usually hidden in consideration of the height of the child. Occasionally, they needed hints as to where the basket was hidden.

We then had a breakfast that was different than any regular meal. The beef tongue was smoked, cooked, and sliced after being refrigerated. And, with this delicacy we always served toast and three-minute eggs. Other mornings we had cereal and fruit with milk. Living on a dairy farm we bottled six or eight quart of milk every day. It was a job that the children found quite boring. But, they drank lots of milk and all of them got tall, although the grandchildren are even taller.

At last, after spending the winter months in the hospital, my husband has come home. He can walk with a cane but all of the doctors could not cure his infection. So, we shall have to live with it, and hope that it will not get worse. Then, he'd need another major operation.

Editor's note: Several readers have expressed interest in sending get-well cards to Ida's husband, Allen. Lancaster Farming would be glad to forward your cards and letters to Ida's attention. Send them to Ida Risser, Lancaster Farming, P.O. Box 609, Ephrata, PA 17522 and we will be glad to forward them.

ANSWER — A reader requested a recipe for McKinley Pie and history about the pie. Thanks to Fern Freeman, Elliotsburg, and L. Boyer, no address included, who sent recipes, which are different. Fern's recipe is from the 1972 Pennsylvania State Grange Cookbook and had been submitted by Mrs. Frank Keim of the Sanatoga Grange No. 25. L. Boyer writes that McKinley and Montgomery pies are very similar. She was told that Montgomery was named for the county where the recipe came from and McKinley was named after a commanding officer during the Civil War. Both are great pies, she writes.

McKinley Pie

1 cup molasses
½ cup brown sugar
1 tablespoon flour
1 egg
1½ cups boiling water
½ teaspoon baking soda
⅛ teaspoon nutmeg
Crumbs:
1½ cups sugar
½ cup shortening
1 egg
1 cup milk
3 cups flour
2 teaspoons baking powder

Line three 8-inch pie plates with pastry. Cream together sugar, molasses, and flour. Add egg and remaining ingredients. Cool. Put evenly in the three dishes. Mix crumbs and put on top. Bake at 375 degrees for 10 minutes and at 350 degrees for 30-35 minutes longer.

ANSWER — Thanks to Jean Winters, Egion, W.Va., for shedding insight on the request for the definition of "shorts," an ingredient listed in an old cookbook. Jean writes that shorts are the result of the milling process as were middlings. This isn't available anymore unless you can find a mill doing fresh grinding, according to Jean. A Miller should explain the process, but she remembers her family used to get an almost cracked wheat meal that they used to cook as cereal. She also thinks they used it in muffins, which were quite coarse.

She believes a mixture of whole wheat and bran can be substituted in the recipe that lists shorts as an ingredient.

Also, in answer to the request for the definition for a gem pan, Jean writes that it was a heavy pan with individual cups and the fireless cooker has no comparable modern pan. She suggests going to an antique store or museum to find the gem pan and fireless cooker. She thinks the hot water beneath a rack did the cooking when the kettle was covered with a tight lid.

Jean also writes that several of the recipes in the 1911 Inglenook Cookbook, which Peggy Wilson inquired about use half white and half graham flour, which indicates a very heavy cake. Jean believes that fine milled wheat (not whole) might be used for unbleached flour and bran can still be purchased. Add a bit of crunch with cracked wheat to use in place of graham flour or try whole wheat and bran.

Thanks to Harold Owens who also clarified the description of shorts. He writes that shorts are a byproduct of grain milling, most commonly wheat but may be most grain. Shorts are similar to bran but smaller with some other grain elements included. Most of the shorts are used in animal feed but some health food stores and local millers have them for human consumption. For more information, Owens recommends the web site http://members.shaw.ca.bethcandlish/util.htm for an article by Canada-Alberta Farm Business Management Initiative titled "Utilization of wheat other than Durum."

West Snyder FFA Members Attend Legislative Leadership Conference

BEAVER SPRINGS (Snyder Co.) — West Snyder FFA members, Zane Bilger, Tyler Miller, Jeremy Roush, Jessica Harper, and Amanda Shaffer attended the FFA State Legislative Leadership Conference (SLLC), March 9-11, in Harrisburg.

FFA members learned table etiquette, opportunities that the FFA offers, and how to read a legislative bill and how the legislative process is conducted. The FFA members split into blue and gold groups to represent the Democrats and Republicans. Each person also served on a bill committee. Members went through the entire legislative process from committee to caucus. The members also toured the Capital Building. On Tuesday members had breakfast with their legislators.

Hannah Etzler, who attended the conference as a second year scholar, assisted the state officer team in the administration of the conference. She was one of twenty-two Pennsylvania applicants for this scholarship opportunity and was one of six selected for the honor. While at the conference, she assisted the PA FFA state officer team in conducting the leadership workshops, the evening reflections, and served as a leader on the group tours.

J.P. Costello's Work With Chickens Has Its Perks

In this photograph there is a close view of a white earlobe. The color of the earlobe is how to determine what color egg the hen will lay. If it is a brown or red lob, the chicken's eggs will be brown. White indicates her eggs will be white. Too bad someone forgot to ask J.P. if the Aracauna chickens have blue or green earlobes.

The Auracana breed, shown eating cracked corn, is known for laying eggs that have green and blue shells. J.P. used the corn to help the fowl behave long enough to pose for a photograph.

Inside the pen with his smaller Japanese breed chickens, J.P. Costello has to scrunch himself up to fit in the space. The birds have beautiful snowy white feathers and black tails.

Holding one of his two mischievous pygmy goats, J.P. and his parents are still debating how to keep the little rascals restrained. They will leap over the sides of their pen. If they ever got the chance to roam, it is certain they would be off on an expedition to explore the neighborhood.

GAY BROWNLEE
Virginia Correspondent

KEARNEYSVILLE, W.Va. J.P. (James Paul, like his dad) Costello, 11, of Kearneysville, W.Va. thoroughly enjoys chickens. He knows a lot about chickens, too. In fact, he has owned a flock of chickens since he was nine years old.

J.P. was asked what makes chickens such neat creatures.

"They lay eggs and they eat worms," he replied. "They eat any kind of bug that moves."

J.P. said a couple of his chickens are tame. The oldest one is named 'Mom." Another pet — "Gimpy" — was a baby when an adult stepped on her tiny foot. After that she didn't move about normally and J.P. says she 'gimped" instead.

The ones with names J.P. can identify, but his mom, Paula, can't tell them apart. For instance, one of his girl birds has a guys name, "Roger." That's because the chick was born around the time J.P.'s friendly neighbor named Roger had died.

"Speedy" isn't living today, but he was a bantam that had one eye and would chase you, J.P. said. One rooster is "Bob" and another is "Boo Boo."

His interest in chickens began when J.P. was in another community visiting his brother's farm. He noticed how the chickens were always scratching in the dirt. It made J.P. really curious to learn more about the fowl.

"I asked if I could see how many eggs were in the laying block," he said. 'I was gathering eggs and I thought that was cool."

On the internet J.P. began researching breeds of chickens. His mind was made up. He was determined to own a flock of chickens and finally, selected Rhode Island Reds, like his dad suggested.

'It's the State Bird of Rhode Island," he said, like a good social studies student.

One day the post office notified them that 25 chicks had arrived in the mail. J.P. and his mother then went to the farm store to purchase feed and were surprised that the store was offering "Araucana" breed chicks for sale.

Now J.P. knew from his research that Araucana eggs have a green or blue shell. After he and his mother discussed it, they decided to purchase two Araucana chicks. In about 21 weeks all the birds would probably be mature enough to lay eggs.

At home all the preparations were completed to give the young fowl a good start in life. There was a brooder with a heat lamp to keep the babies warm, snug and cozy.

Later he learned the importance of taking care of the eggs. J.P. says with emphasis: 'Never, ever wipe em!"

He explained why. When the egg is laid by the chicken, it's outer shell has a natural invisible coating or membrane that prevents bacteria from going inside to the egg itself. Wiping the shell can break the membrane and destroy the protective layer. Of course, before cracking eggs open to cook them its best to clean away all smudges.

Most people don't know that you can tell what color and egg shell will be by looking at the chickens tiny earlobe. If the earlobes are brown or red, the eggs will be, too. If her earlobes are white, the eggs will be white.

Goodness! This long stretchy earthworm that J.P. found under a rock will be tossed over the fence. In the chicken yard the excited flock is waiting in expectancy of a high treat. They see it coming through the air. With feathers flying and loud clucking, they race to be first for the "pecking."

Four big proud and noisy roosters are amongst J.P's chicken pens. There are two Rhode Island red, one buff Orpington, and one barred Rock.

The birds are fun to watch and sometimes their behavior seems silly. They make you laugh and are very pretty, too, with different colored feathers.

Some are a rich red brown. Others have soft creamy tan feathers. The plumage of several is slate gray mixed with white. Mostly, their heads have red combs.

J.P. doesn't want the big chickens pecking the smaller Japanese bantams, so he keeps these snowy white birds in separate pens.

At the Jefferson County Fair "Big Boy" a Rhode Island red male won "Best Cockerel in Show." Someone called him the "Prettiest rooster in Jefferson County."

"Mom" and "Goldie" also took blue ribbons and so did the eggs J.P. entered.

J.P. belongs to the Trailblazers 4-H Club where, in public speaking competition, he did a visual presentation about chickens, of course. He won a county blue ribbon and a state red ribbon.

J.P.'s responsibility morning and evening is to feed his livestock. So it is a good thing he loves being outdoors.

A South Jefferson Elementary School fifth grader, J.P. says: "Twenty minutes are not enough for me outside at recess."

J.P. checks the news and weather every morning on television. Afterward he puts on camouflage coveralls of olive green and brown to feed and water the animals. The grain and mash must last all day. He checks the three Dorset sheep in the grassy pasture of Cardinals' Meadow and makes sure the pygmy goats are tended.

On the weekends J.P. works at a paying job to earn some money. Friday, after school and twice on Saturdays and Sundays, he feeds 120 calves for dairyman Bob Gruber.

The youngest calves are bottle fed until they are three weeks old. J.P. fills the bottles from a large vessel of milk, puts on the nipples and then hangs the bottles on a rack. The position of the rack and the bottles enables the calves to drink without help from J.P.

"I put grain in the back and hay in the back for those who don't have milk." he said.

Each feeding takes about one and a half hours.

J.P. recently spent some of his money for a Love bird. It has lime green body feathers, a blue tail and peach around its neck. It's name is "Peachy."

J.P. is so industrious that when he's working, you can catch a gleam of satisfaction in his dark brown eyes beneath his cap.

Someday, J.P. is going to own a ranch — a very big ranch — he said, where he will be able to raise everything. Before then, however, he wants to drive a big dump truck to relocate tons of earth. There's just something cool about operating a dump truck, he said.

For shed or fences, dissolve 15 pounds common salt in 5 gallons water and slowly stir into lime putty. Apply whitewash on wet fence. It is transparent when wet and opaque when dry.

This whitewash mixture lasts several months if not used immediately.

ANSWER — Anna Byler thanks many readers for answering her request for a poem about a young girl who, after being told by her mother to dress warmly, goes out wearing only a thin shawl and freezes.

The highlight of the evening was making sock puppets and performing skits.

Material, glue, buttons, pipe cleaners, flowers, and many other craft materials were buzzing as 30 socks were made into puppets. To conclude the evening, 4-H members made their own fruit and yogurt parfaits then settled down in their sleeping bags to a movie.

Those wanting a complete listing of 4-H club meetings or willing to volunteer their time in Northampton County should contact Kelly Weisner at the Northampton County Cooperative Extension at (610) 746-1970.

Rutgers Students Attend Collegiate 4-H Conference

NEW BRUNSWICK, N.J. — College students, Jillian Augustin, Sarah Tomasino, and Michael Holcombe represented Rutgers, the State University of New Jersey, as delegates to the National Collegiate 4-H Conference, Feb. 20-23, in Fort Worth, Tex.

Michael Holcombe son of James and Karen Holcombe, Mohrsville, was a member of the Berks County 4-H Beef Club for ten years.

The conference, hosted by Texas A&M, Texas Tech, and Kansas State University, showcased many activities, all focusing on leadership and community service.

While at the conference students from universities and collegiate 4-H clubs across the United States converged to attend workshops designed to stimulate character building, increase leadership and role model abilities, and perfect business etiquette skills, to name a few.

Additionally, delegates assisted in a restoration effort at the historic Fort Worth Stockyards as a community service project, which was the highlight of the conference. The conference concluded with a motivational speech by the famous poet and writer, Baxter Black, during the closing ceremony banquet.

Antiques Center

During the 1940s, many children received delightful pieces such as these Knickerbocker Plastics. Some people were lucky enough to save these pieces, and those who didn't are often willing to pay $50 and more for a set of plastic bunnies that bring back warm memories from their childhoods. Today the rabbit with cart manufactured by J. Chein and Company, USA, sells for $200 or more depending on condition. The single brown rabbit is German-made celluloid. Children removed the head to find the candy stored inside.

Childhood Revisited Through Easter Collectibles

LOU ANN GOOD
Food And Family
Features Editor

LITITZ (Lancaster Co.) — Chocolate candy and marshmallow chicks bring squeals of delight to children, but after the chocolate disappears, little remains except sore tummies — unless the candy packaging was saved.

Candy containers made of tin, porcelain, celluloid, paper mache, and even plastic are hot collectibles.

Many Easter-related collectibles that cost only a few pennies when presented as gifts — now sell for hundreds of dollars.

Cheap plastic chicks and bunnies delighted children who have now reached adulthood and are willing to pay top dollar to retrieve childhood memorabilia.

The tradition of incorporating bunnies, chicks, eggs, and candy into Easter celebrations started long ago. These items were used in festivals that welcomed springtime.

The ancient Persians are thought to have presented eggs, which were scarce at the time, as gifts during the spring to symbolize new life. As eggs became more plentiful, people began to color them with bright colors to signify the end of a long, cold winter.

In 325 A.D., the first Sunday after the full moon appearing on or after March 21 was set aside to celebrate Easter. Over the years, Easter celebrations adapted some of the spring celebration festivities.

The transition seemed natural. Christians regarded the egg as a sign of hope and resurrection. Just as Jesus came forth from the tomb and offers new life, new life breaks forth from the egg.

It is said that Dutch settlers in Pennsylvania and New York were responsible for introducing the custom of coloring eggs for Easter. Easter was a time of great merriment, and Peter Stuyvesant, the popular Dutch governor of New Amsterdam, was a great promoter of Easter festivities. Egg rolls for children were customary on our nation's capitol grounds even before 1809.

In the 19th century, German candy factories began producing chocolate rabbits, eggs, chickens, and other sweet confectioners. Many of these were packaged in tin and celluloid containers.

According to Pamela Wiggins, who writes about Easter collectibles, pieces marked "German" were generally produced before 1918. Items with a "German Republic" stamp date were produced between 1918-1933. The most valuable Easter collectibles were probably made in Germany, but toy rabbits, candy containers, and porcelain figurines were also produced by other countries and by Japan after the mid-1930s.

Pieces marked USA were mainly manufactured after the 1930s. Demand for these are growing, including the plastic market.

If you are looking for an Easter-related collectible, search for a hand-blown glass ornament made by Radko or by individual artists.

And, if your Easter chocolate comes in cute containers — save them. If trends continue, values will surge by the time today's children become adults.

To the delight of children and adults, this tin rabbit still cranks out the tune, "Here Comes Peter Cottontail." It was made by Mattel Inc. between 1940-1950, and is highly collectible. Depending on condition, one of these rabbits can fetch hundreds of dollars at auction.

Collectible American Patriotic Symbols

Since the September 11 terrorism attacks there has been not only a revived interest in artifacts reflecting America's patriot symbols but also newly created objects.

Pins, banners, and flag jewelry as well as peace dove pins are everywhere. The handbags and tee shirts with the stars and stripes motif are among the many collectibles of tomorrow. Even some of the humble items found in catalogs like flag motif dishes and door mats are put-away possibilities. As with most collectibles some are downright ugly while others are beautiful.

This interest has been reflected in Americana auctions and in antique shops specializing in 18th, 19th, and early 20th century objects.

There is even a new Price Guide, "Official Price Guide to American Patriotic Memorabilia" by Michael Polak, a collector.

A collection can go in many directions. Not only can it specialize in antique or contemporary objects, but concentrate on art, artifacts and decorative objects, to mention a few. A contemporary collection could focus on items made after September 11, from anti-Bin Laden posters and banners to glass and weavings. One of my favorite discoveries was in a North Carolina rifle shop. A hand-painted dart board with Bin Laden's likeness and red, white and blue darts. This can be the folk art of tomorrow.

Doubtless there will more individually-made symbols.

There's nothing new about patriotic symbols. They've been around since and before the American Revolution. The eagle was (and is) the most popular liberty symbol. From the War of 1812 until after the Civil War, it and other patriotic symbols, from stars to the flag, were used on every conceivable object, including furniture, textiles and toys.

Antique Detective

Children learned early on about patriotism from their untrained artisan fathers and mothers. Imaginative toys and whirligigs with flags and Uncle Sam made with found materials now sell at auctions for thousands of dollars.

Women from the early 19th century to the 20th century created blankets and quilts with the stars and stripes as a subject. They also used them in hook rug designs.

You don't have to spend a lot to begin a collection. Such humble items such as postcards, sheet music and even match covers were produced in war time with patriot art. As Polak points out in his book, sheet music prices range from $15 to under $100.

Prices depend on age, condition and art work.

Postcards with patriotic themes were made from 1898 to 1918. Photo cards that showed young women with a flag or even a woman depicting Betsy Ross making the first American flag were popular. It was customary, until after World War 1 to send cards for the Fourth of July and Flag Day.

Old frames with carved, painted or molded patriotic symbols of eagles and flags still turn up for a few dollars at flea markets and garage sales. Another place to look are the rag bags at house sales and antique shops. There are textile treasures to be discovered.

Maybe they are a bit ragged. All you need is a remnant with a date and symbol.

CLUES: Probably one of the best places to go searching is the Internet.

Type in "patriotic memorabilia" and you're on your way. At antique shows and shops look in the display cases offering small objects. A grouping can make an interesting wall collection.

Along with patriotic symbols are the symbols of protest. They can also be part of such a collection, to give an historical perspective.

Crop Protection Industry Welcomes CDC Biomonitoring Report

WASHINGTON, D.C.—"We welcome the Centers for Disease Control's Second National Report on Human Exposure to Environmental Chemicals announced today and continue to fully support this important monitoring program. CDC should be commended for undertaking this unprecedented assessment of American's exposure to environmental chemicals and for its objective evaluation of this data," said Jay J. Vroom, president, CropLife America.

"The pesticide data contained in the report indicates that the American public can be assured that the regulatory safeguards for pesticides that are in place are very tough and are working as they are intended. Americans can be confident about the safety of our food supply and the public health protections made possible by pesticides. Prior to registration for use by the Environmental Protection Agency, the typical pesticide undergoes at least 120 health, safety, and environmental tests. Such testing accounts for all populations, including adults, infants, and children," said Vroom.

The CDC report presents information about detections in blood and urine for 116 chemicals and chemical metabolites—breakdown products — of polycyclic aromatic hydrocarbons, dioxins, furans, coplanar polychlorinated biphenyls, noncoplanar PCBs, phytoestrogens, selected organophosphate pesticides, organochlorine pesticides, carbamate pesticides, herbicides and pest repellants, and disinfectants. Blood and urine samples were collected from between 2,000 and 2,500 participants for each chemical tested in CDC's National Health and Nutritional Examination Survey, an ongoing national health survey of the U.S. population.

Customize Your Bales

Without Paying Extra

Variable Chamber Balers Let You Make The Call.

If you demand a smaller hay package and a baler that's easy to operate, the New Idea® 4643 (4'x3') and 4644 (4'x4') are for you. Thanks to the variable bale size, you can customize bales to fit your operation. And each model creates bales that range from 30 to over 50 inches in diameter.

With so much diversity, you'll only bale the size you need. Their low-profile, full-width pick-up glides easily over fields, catching every stem. The pickup height can be easily adjusted.

For more details on the versatile 4643 and 4644 round balers, visit your AGCO® New Idea dealer today.

Get the REEL Advantage

A Faster, More Thorough Mix

front view

The large-diameter reel provides a gentle tumbling action and the two side augers produce an end-to-end blending action. This unique combination ensures faster mixing and unloading times, and a very thorough mix, even when mixing small batches.

Cut-Out Clutch Protection
No more burnt or hot discs to wrestle with. Great protection . for those times when your baler's pulling harder on the outside rows, the tractor's overpowered, or you accidently overfill when trying to bale that last strip of hay

Here's why:

- 5-bar pickup handles bigger windrows, faster speeds.
- Simple, horizontal bale-starting system is designed for fast starts.
- Bottom drum design lets you pull in hay faster; often allowing you to drive a full gear faster.
- Best HaySaver Wheels in the field.
- Up to 1200 lbs. in a single 65" dia. x 48" wide package; 2000 lb. capacity with silage baler option.
- Silage option lets you bale wet or dry without changing a thing.
- Make bales 17% larger* than a standard 5' dia. x 4' wide baler at virtually the same price!*

 determined by comparing volume measurement of a standard 60" dia x 48" wide bale versus a 65" dia x 48" wide Vermeer bale*

 Price comparison is based on published list prices (Y2000) between Vermeer 554XL Series Baler and other 5' x 4' competitive round baler models*

EVERLAST II EVERLAST II EVERLAST II
Metal Roofs Aren't Created Equal

EVERLAST II IS BETTER:
- it is galvanized heavier, like old times.
- it is heat formed, less paint cracks.
- is cut while hot, prevents early edge rust.
- won't scratch as easy, paint is harder.
- won't bend or buckle as easy, stronger design.
- laps are tighter, and virtually invisible.
- nail/screws seal better, ribs fit tighter to head.
- zinc phosphate, not chromate under paint.
- still priced about the same or less.

EVERLAST II
is excellent for houses and barns.
DOUBLE DIPPED GALVANIZED
is proven best for animals.
STANDING SEAM
is ideal for houses.

What's heat forming?
In metal roofing and siding it's the best way to go! Here is why.
Everlast heats the paint very hot on their Everlast II product before they cut and form it into roofing and siding Tests have proven that heating paint before cutting and bending prevents virtually all microscopic cracks in the paint Ask our competition if they heat form. It's important. Normally manufacturers form and cut at room temperature Unfortunately that cracks the paint causing early rust at formed bends and edges – Ceiling systems designed for your dairy, swine, and poultry facilities, as well – as shops, warehouses, garages, arenas, and more.

Tired of working in a cold, noisy shop?
These ceiling systems are designed to hold any amount of insulation, and with insulation above, produce sound reduction qualities much greater than steel.

Is the banding in your hog or poultry barn deteriorating?
Let us replace them with our heavier polyester bands which do not stretch or become brittle over time.

Are you frustrated with the birds in your implement shed?
Get the problem under control with a triply ceiling, as well as greatly improving the lighting.

Contemplating a drop ceiling?
Demand a triply ceiling above your drop ceiling if there is insulation being installed. This will serve as a vapor barrier along with permanently preventing falling insulation.

Providing the Ag industry with a very durable, attractive, waterproof, noncorrosive, alternative to conventional ceilings at a fraction of the cost.
From 20¢/Sq. Ft. Installed

Imported from Holland, ORLANDO is a black 17.1 Hand Dutch Harness Horse Stallion.

The Dutch Harness Horse is a wonderful horse to cross with existing breeds of horses used for driving and work. Dutch Harness Horses have been bred in Holland for over 80 years. The sole purpose is to increase trot and stride, thus producing driving horses that move more efficiently and cover more ground with less effort.

Exciting opportunities exist for the serious breeder looking to be involved with the induction and infusion of these great horses into today's breeding programs.

ORLANDO is standing at Mogadore, Ohio for the 2003 breeding season, shipped semen is available. The 2003 introductory stud fee is $1000.00 and includes a live foal guarantee.

DAIRY RESEARCH PROGRAM

• New Applications • Product Development

Initial development work is conducted at the Ruminant Intensive Research Unit at the Decatur, IN Research Center. At this facility, with 20 cannulated lactating cows, research emphasizes the development of products and feeding programs that improve rumen function.

From this initial development work, products with commercial applications are evaluated at the Twin Oaks Dairy, a 500-cow dairy unit at Emmittsburg, MD.

The Twin Oaks Dairy field research is a key segment of the successful dairy feed product development program for Alliance Nutrition. At this facility, individual cow identification, daily milk production and weekly measurements of milk components enable us to monitor and evaluate individual cow response to the ingredients, feed products and feeding programs being tested.

This data is used to validate the commercial success of the Alliance Nutrition dairy feeding programs and enhances the confidence of commercial success of these products and programs for our dairy customers.

Spring is just breaking as I write this message. We had a cold, wet fall followed by a tough winter but things are finally looking like spring. Just about everyone is looking forward to beautiful green fields.

These bright green fields are more than beauty, however. They have the potential to convert sunlight into high quality forage which ruminants convert into

Less than four years since first being identified in Pennsylvania, nearly every timothy hay producer in Pennsylvania has heard of the timothy mite and the problems that this pest can cause for timothy hay producers.

First identified in the spring of 2000 in southcentral Pennsylvania, the mite, actually referred to as the cereal rust mite, has spread across the state and has been noted in Delaware, Maryland and New

More Grass In Store For Masonic Homes' Shorthorns

DAVE LEFEVER
Lancaster Farming Staff

ELIZABETHTOWN (Lancaster Co.) — The farm at Masonic Homes has an impressive herd of purebred Shorthorn beef cattle, grazing the hills of a unique property.

The Masonic Homes community and farm, founded in 1910, is situated on 1,400 acres just on the edge of Elizabethtown. About 1,500 residents, including 40 school-aged children, live there.

Owned and operated by the Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania, Masonic Homes offers health care, assisted living, residential living, and retirement accomodations adjacent to its working livestock farm, orchard, and farmer's market.

Since the Masonic Homes Holstein dairy herd was sold last December, farm supervisor Frank Stoltzfus said he has more time to focus on the 150 head of Shorthorn cattle. Part of his attention is centered on switching to a more grass-based system.

Stoltzfus has managed the farm since 1985, including the Shorthorn herd first established by Gerald Tracy, Masonic Homes environmental services and land management director.

Performance has been the focus of the beef breeding program here for more than 20 years. This work recently earned the farm the 2002 Seed Stock Breeder of the Year award from the Pennsylvania Cattlemen's Association.

Stoltzfus is in the process of changing a sizeable portion of the farm's cropland into permanent grazing paddocks for the beef herd. So far, about 60 acres have been seeded and

DAVE LEFEVER

HARRISBURG (Dauphin Co.) — Be sure to see the Chesapeake Bay Foundation's comprehensive guide of conservation resources for farmers and landowners in the center spread of this Foraging Around issue.

The newly-released Guide to Conservation Funding Programs in Pennsylvania is a cross-referencing field guide identifying conservation practices appropriate for farms, along with available financial support.

David Wise, scientist with the Chesapeake Bay Foundation (CBF) office in Harrisburg, said farmers and landowners can benefit tremendously from having the various agencies and programs pooled together in one list.

"It's become pretty clear that there's an enormous variety of funding resources out there," Wise said.

He said CBF first recognized the need for such a project in 1997 when it became evident that many farmers and landowners were faced with a wide array of conservation support options from federal, state, and local programs.

As an agency with a focus on water quality, helping farmers with good land management, and partnering with a wide range of agencies, Wise said the CBF was in an ideal position to compile the guide.

"We recognized the need and had the ability to respond," Wise said.

The guide was first released earlier this year and was recently updated. For more information, call CBF at (717) 234-5550.

Northeast: 'Huge Potential' For Grazing

Irish Brothers Suggest Combined Approach

DAVE LEFEVER
Lancaster Farming Staff

GRANTVILLE (Dauphin Co.) — An abundance of high-quality land and good access to reasonably-priced silages and concentrate feeds suggest that pasture-based systems have a "bright and profitable" future in the Northeast, according to Tom and Dr. John Roche.

The Irish brothers spoke at the annual PFGC conference, which took place in early March at the Grantville Holiday Inn.

The brothers grew up on a dairy farm in the southern part of Ireland, and Tom continues to manage the family's grass-based dairy farm there. The Roches also run a dairy farm in New Zealand, where John is employed as a nutritional scientist.

Two years ago, the brothers visited several farms in Pennsylvania, Maryland, and New fenced, and he plans to convert another 200 acres to grass during the next two years.

"We can be more flexible now," Stoltzfus said of the reduced need for cropland to provide feed for the 140-cow Holstein herd, which was managed in a nongrazing setup.

Grass varieties he has seeded on the farm include perennial ryegrass, timothy, tall fescue, short season orchardgrass, smooth bromegrass, and Kentucky bluegrass. The 60 acres of pasture fenced so far are divided into paddocks that radiate out from the central hay feeding station and handling facility.

The pasture is equipped with a series of circular, concrete, spring-fed waterers.

"It worked well this winter," Stoltzfus said of the gravity-fed watering system. "It never froze." Last summer, the waterers temporarily dried up during the extended drought but returned with the rains last fall.

A recently built outdoor feeding structure was designed to reduce feed waste and manure runoff and "keep cows out of the mud," Stoltzfus said. It consists of a sloping concrete pad with two rows of headlocks sandwiching a gated drive-through area where the hay is distributed. At the lower end of the feeding station, an excavated earthen basin catches the runoff and allows slow infiltration into the soil.

Manure is scraped to the end of the feeder and allowed to compost on its own. According to Stoltzfus, the composted manure becomes nearly as fine-textured as "chicken litter" before it is spread directly on the pasture.

At least for now, the added pasturelands at Masonic Homes are more for the sake of the brood cow herd than for the 60 or so head of beef finished on grain each year.

"Our goal at this point is to get as much out of the grass as we can for the cow herd," Stoltzfus said. He said he'd want to learn more about grazing before making the move toward finishing animals on grass.

The homegrown Shorthorn feeders finish at an average of 1,275 pounds at 14-15 months on grain, according to Stoltzfus. As an old English breed with similarities to Angus, "Shorthorns have a real good ability to marble," he said.

While most of the beef finished on the farm is direct-marketed to retail customers, the main focus of the Masonic Homes Shorthorn operation is on producing high-performance breeding stock.

An embryo-flushing program has been in place on the farm for about 10 years. The farm achieves a 65 percent conception rate for embryo transplants, with all the work done on site by local ET specialist Dr. Larry Kennel.

"Part of our success with the embryo work is that we do it all here," Stoltzfus said. "The embryos never leave the farm."

This year, six top cows are set to be flushed, with the embryos going into lower-quality heifer and crossbred carriers on the farm.

In addition to the embryo donor cows, about 25 females will be artificially inseminated and another 50 serviced by one of several bulls kept on the farm.

Stoltzfus uses other technologies as well to get the most out of the breeding program. These include uterine implants to synchronize female heats, and computer-signaling heat detectors glued onto cows' rumps.

About half of of the calves born on the farm are halter-broke each year. Masonic Homes exhibits its Shorthorns at various shows, including the Pennsylvania Farm Show, the Keystone International Livestock Exhibition, the North American International Livestock Exhibition, and the Maryland Eastern Regional Show. Showing helps establish buyer contacts from across the country.

"The only reason we show is to market cattle," Stoltzfus said. The farm has sold breeding stock to buyers as far away as Texas and Nebraska.

Masonic Homes is part of a four-farm Shorthorn marketing arrangement called Mid-Atlantic Genetics. One of the partners in this venture is the McElhaney farm of western Pennsylvania. The group also includes a farm from Maryland and one from Ohio.

"The four of us cooperate together in marketing semen and bulls," Stoltzfus said, noting that the group is also beginning to work together on selling freezer beef. "It's a real loosely made arrangement. It's done on a handshake."

A regular marketing event put on by the co-op is what they call their Preferred Stock Sale. It has taken place on the first Saturday after Labor Day for the past seven years, with all intentions to continue into the future.

More than 30 females and about a dozen bulls are sold for production per year, plus about 15 head that go to club youth.

Shorthorns are known for easygoing temperaments. Their colors range from dark red to roan to white, showing any amount of variegation among them. Many Shorthorns are actually hornless.

"Polled Shorthorns sounds like an oxymoron," Stoltzfus said. "But there are more polled than horned."

Beside one full-time employee on Masonic Homes farm, some part-time help is needed to prepare calves for the show ring. Elyssa Hevner from Union Bridge, Md., is an education major at nearby Elizabethtown College. She helps halter-break calves at Masonic Homes during her free time on spring afternoons.

The farm gives her a chance to keep up one of her favorite hobbies while in college, said Hevner, who raises Shorthorns on her grandfather's farm in Maryland.

Along with the farm's commitment to youth and good Shorthorn breeding and marketing, grassland management is becoming integral to the Masonic Homes' practice of looking toward the future.

According to Director Tracy, "Grazing is part of our long-range planning."

PFGC ✦ President's Corner ✦

meat and milk. We have been given grass, legumes and other plants which stabilize the soil and, most importantly, feed our livestock which in turn feed us.

What a great system that we have been blessed with. The cow and other ruminants really are the backbone of our food system. But for some reason, many producers have removed their livestock from pasture over the years.

The cow was created to be on pasture. Of course pasture growth does not occur all year long and she does need stored feed for several months. But why do many farms feed large quantities of relatively low quality stored feed when during over half the year the cow can harvest her own feed? High quality pasture is extremely close to a balanced TMR ration and it only costs about 2 cents per pound of dry matter.

At the same time, while the cow is working for you to harvest her own forage, she is also in a clean environment. That is assuming the farm manager is managing his pastures. Ah hah! Here lies the answer that many farmers and the support industry — including many in the universities — have forgotten about pasture.

While U.S. agriculture put its efforts into mechanized systems focusing on corn, beans, alfalfa and other grains, we simply forgot about pasture. However, in many other parts of the world, advancements in pasture management over the last several decades have been huge.

How can New Zealand ship milk around the world without subsidies? The answer is in the efficiency of the pasture system! Yes, we are not in New Zealand, but we can take advantage of many aspects of their system others around the world. Managed pasture systems offer huge potential for strengthening our dairy and livestock economy. In fact, managed grazing is now rapidly moving into the early adoption stage of acceptance.

Many farmers are making grazing work very well, but just think how much more we can improve. We need the industry and the universities to support its advancement. Graziers are just learning to walk. Think of the potential when all the pieces of the puzzle come together for our part of the world.

I am very excited about the future of the dairy industry in Pennsylvania. The potential is huge! To quote Dr. John Roche of Dexcel, a New Zealand applied research organization, "Pennsylvania dairy farmers have the potential to have dairy profits above $1,000 per cow at $12 milk."

Managed grazing systems will be the backbone of making it happen. Stored forage systems will always be needed but should be used to supplement the primary grazing system. John Roche and his brother Tom from Ireland were featured speakers at The Pennsylvania Grazing Conferences in March. We have much to learn from around the world and from each other. The Pennsylvania Forage and Grassland Council hopes to be part of that process.

'Huge Potential'

York to learn about grazing potential in the area.

"There is a huge potential along the northeastern seaboard, and a lot more money can be made," John said of the opportunities for producing milk on grass-based systems.

However, farmers interested in grazing here need to make sure they don't lean too hard on grazing models from other countries such as Ireland or New Zealand, warned the Roches. The unique set of factors involved in each location call for different approaches.

"The key to profitable pasture systems is maximizing production and utilization of pasture that is, maximizing the milk produced from pasture," the Roches pointed out.

Tom Roche, Irish dairy farmer, discusses grazing with a PFGC conference participant.

"This is not the same as producing milk solely from pasture.

"The most profitable system will probably combine high stocking rates with purchased feeds and will have moderate-yielding cows which calve seasonally. If Ireland wasn't limited by quota and if New Zealand wasn't limited by milk price and grain price, this is probably the system they would use."

According to the Roches, however, these systems that rely heavily or almost entirely on grass might not be most appropriate in the U.S. where supplementary feeds are readily available and milk quotas do not exist.

"All systems have their limitations, and it is for this reason that each system must be assessed within the context it is being used and the positive attributes can then be extended to other systems," they noted.

The Roches outlined key areas where they believe Northeast dairy farmers can improving grazing profitability. These include

- applying adequate nitrogen and other fertilizers to grasslands;
- offering supplements during periods of grass deficit;
- considering buying grain supplements rather than producing — this may be more cost-effective;
- developing a simple feeding system, particularly for providing energy in the diet of the milking cows;
- avoiding unnecessary capital costs; and
- researching appropriate pasture management strategies.

"Don't believe confinement system operators or feed merchants when they tell you that pasture is a poor quality, unbalanced feed and that you therefore need to complement it," John said. "Pasture will not result in the same milk yields as high-input systems becasue of the difference in dry matter intake and energy expended in grazing and walking.

"There's a lot more money to be made." John Roche, dairy nutrition scientist with Dexcel New Zealand speaks at the PFGC conference.

"However, high quality spring pasture is every bit as nutritious as a TMR and only a fraction of the cost."

Grass Feeding Can Pave Way For Improved Protein Use

ANDY ANDREWS
Editor

LANCASTER (Lancaster Co.) — Quality of forage from hay can rival or even outdo conventional corn silage, as proven by tests conducted recently in Lancaster County.

Of 49 samples taken on four farms in 2002, crude protein levels stood at 24.8, with net energy, lactation levels of .724 with a relative feed value of 178.

This was set during a drought year on land that wasn't even irrigated, according to Bruce Kreider, White Oak Mills.

Kreider spoke to more than 80 producers and agri-industry representatives in March at the Lancaster County Family Dairy Day at the Farm and Home Center.

For dairy producers who want to show real results on potential profitability, the key may be getting a greater percentage of cows into a third, fourth, or even fifth lactation, with high-quality forages. "Addressing that addresses your income," said Kreider.

High quality forages, Kreider noted, reduce purchase protein and energy costs. At best, he said, "energy levels (of high quality hay forage) exceed corn silage and triple protein."

With a regular hay forage investment, room can be left to focus investments on brewer grains or protein by-product ingredients to supplement dairy feed.

Kreider asked producers to look at their operations closely to see if high-quality forages are part of the overall feed investment strategies.

"Where's the secret?" he said. "Where's the thing to make opportunity for change?"

Right now, he noted, "I have no magic that I can pull out of my hat." But optimizing the diet and getting optimal pricing on feedstuffs can go a long way.

What nutritionists have seen, however, are the high amounts of fecal starch in what is wasted on conventional corn diets. There is a tremendous amount of bypass starch in fecal material, which turns into a "tremendous profit drain," Kreider said.

The key: getting the right nutrients off the right crop with the least costly methods. And taking those considerations together with additional cow lactations can help pave the way to profits.

Using technologies such as BST can also help maintain production curve at higher levels and spread the costs over more hundredweight of milk.

Grazing allows dairy producers to literally "cut out the middleman" by not only having the cows self-harvest the nutrients but provide a way to handle manure.

Kreider provided information from the University of Maryland that pointed out, between 1997-2000, that in a confinement operation, profit per cow stood at about $477. With grazing, that amount totaled $580. Confinement feed cost per hundredweight totaled $4.03, but with grazing, totaled $3.55.

With growing corn, profits can vary tremendously year to year. With grass, "you'll make money every year," said Kreider. "On the worst years, you'll be way ahead" (of corn).

However, producers would be crazy not to look at corn silage and corn grain feed to supplement the pasture.

Grazing provides several other advantages, too:

- It's the "gold standard" for cow comfort
- High forage rations reduce potential for acidosis, laminitis
- Vitamin levels are higher in fresh forages
- Cows are comfortable on the grass
- Cows may be in better physical condition on grass.

You may be asking, "What does BR mean?" BR stands for a Branched Root characteristic in alfalfa. Chemgro Seeds Paragon BR is an alfalfa with a branching root system. In tough wet conditions, Paragon BR will utilize a branching root system in poor areas. A taproot is utilized under normal conditions. BR means longer lasting stands of alfalfa in fields with less than perfect soil conditions. More of the root system stays above the water table, better securing the plant in the soil when freezing and thawing occurs. This branched rooted trait will adjust accordingly as the moisture stress intensifies. Paragon BR is a must for those uneven fields with low wet areas. Places where conventional alfalfas tend to die early, Paragon will provide you with high quality, even stand of alfalfa for a full four years. Paragon BR is a fall dormancy 3 alfalfa, with an excellent winter hardiness of 1.6. It is well adapted to the soils, conditions and diseases we face here in the Northeast.

PFGC ❖ SPECIAL REPORT ❖

Early Season Nitrogen For Grass-Clover Pastures

Dr. William Stout
Soil Scientist
USDA/Agricultural Research Service

Grass/clover pastures that rely on clover to supply enough nitrogen for pasture growth are often nitrogen deficient in the spring. This is because the biological processes (fixation and mineralization) that provide nitrogen to support pasture growth are temperature dependent. So grazing in the spring must be delayed until air and soil temperatures increase to the minimal levels needed to provide enough nitrogen for plant growth.

Nitrogen fertilization of grass/clover pastures in the spring can increase early season pasture yields and decrease differences in seasonal production. But applying too much nitrogen fertilizer will decrease the clover portion of the pasture and decrease nitrogen fixation by the clover. This causes the clover portion of the pasture to become too low to make a significant contribution to the nutrition to the grazing animal and too low to provide sufficient nitrogen for pasture growth later in the growing season.

The reason for the decreased clover portion is the increased competition for light brought on by the increased growth of the grass. To find out the best spring nitrogen fertilization rate for grass/clover pastures for the Northeast, the USDA/Agricultural Research Service ran a study measuring the effect of nitrogen fertilization and grazing height on spring yield of a grass/clover pasture.

The study was conducted for three years at the Penn State Research Farm on an orchardgrass/white clover pasture. The treatments were four rates of nitrogen (0, 20, 40, and 80 pounds per acre) and three grazing heights (6, 9, and 12 inches). Nitrogen fertilizer was applied in middle to late March just as the grass began to grow. The individual grazing height treatments were harvested whenever the pasture growth reached the desired grazing height.

The goal of early season nitrogen fertilization of grass/clover pastures is to increase early season yields, without decreasing the clover portion of the pasture.

The results of the study show that early season pasture yield can be increased by about 20 percent and the amount of clover in the pasture can be maintained by applying 40 pounds of nitrogen per acre and grazing whenever the pasture height reaches 6 inches. The 80 pounds per acre nitrogen rate and 9- and 12-inch grazing heights increased pasture yields but decreased the amount of clover in the pasture. The 20 pounds per acre nitrogen rate was not enough to significantly increase pasture yield.

In addition to increasing early season pasture yield applying 40 pounds of nitrogen per acre to selected grass/clover paddocks within a grazing system would help set up a grazing schedule that would better distribute pasture production over the whole grazing season. However, the benefits to a particular farm of early season nitrogen fertilization of grass/clover pastures have to be evaluated with regard to the forage needs of the farm. The amount and quality of farm-stored forages, the price and quality of off-farm forages, and the cost of fertilizer nitrogen are a few of the factors that need to be evaluated when considering early season nitrogen fertilization of grass/clover pastures.

Bill Stout, author of this article, passed away on March 1. Bill was one of the original founding fathers of Project Grass and a Project Grass adviser. Bill gave time and advice to the grazing movement for more than 22 years, and received this year's PFGC Research/Extension Award.

From Grass To Gas: Growing Switchgrass For Energy In The Northeast

Paul R. Adler,
Matt A. Sanderson,
R. Howard Skinner,
and Curtis Dell
USDA - ARS
University Park

Switchgrass has received much attention as a model perennial energy crop for the U.S. The use of native warm-season forage grasses as an energy crop may provide a cropping alternative for farmers. Attributes of switchgrass desirable for bioenergy cropping include its demonstrated high productivity across many environments, suitability for marginal land, relatively low water and nutrient requirements, and positive environmental benefits.

Currently, the costs of producing energy from switchgrass and other biomass feedstocks exceed the cost of fossil-fuel derived energy. However, the potential environmental benefits of bioenergy may offset the higher costs.

Environmental benefits include increased soil quality, soil carbon sequestration, reduced losses of soil nutrients, protecting riparian zones and surface water quality, recycling nutrients from sewage sludge and livestock manure, and increased wildlife habitat value. By using biomass-derived fuels instead of fossil fuels, there is a potential for sequestering significant amounts of carbon in the soil. Several studies have reported increases in soil organic carbon under switchgrass grown as a biomass feedstock in the U.S.

Switchgrass can be integrated into cropping systems and could be used either as biomass feedstock or as forage for livestock. Producers knowledgeable of forage management could readily adapt these practices to switchgrass in bioenergy cropping. Forage producers already have the machinery, technology, and infrastructure in place to establish, manage, harvest, store, and transport the crop. The principal constraints to switchgrass production in the northeast are reliable and economic establishment techniques and efficient use of external nitrogen inputs. Another issue is the potential use of Conservation Reserve Program (CRP) lands as a source of biomass feedstock. In fall 2002 we began a survey of CRP and other grasslands in the northeast as part of a resource inventory.

Our research unit is conducting a research program on biomass energy production as part of an overall national effort by the USDA-Agricultural Research Service. Specifically, our research unit focuses on determining the biomass production potential of perennial grasses (for example, switchgrass), evaluating alternative cropping systems for biomass production, and evaluating the economic and environmental effects of these cropping systems. This research is primarily field-based and will include an on-farm research component. We have established large-scale plots on a cooperating farm in Westmoreland County on which we will be investigating how seasonal harvest time and frequency affect both switchgrass biomass yield and quality as a biofuel and how these management practices affect its value as wildlife habitat. We will also measure soil carbon changes and atmospheric carbon exchange.

Senate Backs Conservation Security Program

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Leaders of the full U.S. Senate and Senate Agriculture Committee agreed in February to restore full funding to the new Conservation Security Program (CSP), which was slashed by nearly one-half during final negotiations for the 2003 federal budget, to offset $3.1 billion in weather-related crop and livestock losses over the last two years.

Senate leaders reportedly pledged that the funding cuts will not affect the program during the current farm bill, due to expire in 2008, and they will use the "first appropriate vehicle" available to restore full funding as set forth in the 2002 Farm Bill.

The CSP would reward farmers and ranchers who practice land, water, and wildlife stewardship as part of their ongoing work, with "green payments" of up to $50,000 per year (Reuters, Feb. 14, www.planetark.org). Full funding, estimated at $7.7 billion through 2012, would pay for all producers with approved conservation plans who want to participate in the program; currently, without additional funding from Congress, the program is capped at $3.8 billion.

Opponents of the program cuts said that raiding mandatory farm bill programs to pay for natural disasters sets a poor precedent, especially since conservation initiatives like CSP may help to lessen the effects of drought and flooding.

Check For Mites

Jersey.

Early season reports this year from crop consultants and extension agents indicate that the winter of 2003 has not had any detrimental affect on the over-wintering adults and that eggs have already been laid and hatched. Timothy hay producers are urged to check all stands of timothy for symptoms of infestations and to be prepared to apply proper control materials in a timely manner.

Biology

Unlike most crop pests, the cereal rust mite prefers colder conditions to summer weather. The mites over-winter in the crown area of timothy plants as adults and eggs. Maryland has recorded breeding activity as early as January.

Each female can lay 20 to 30 eggs that rapidly reach maturity in 16-18 days. As a result, populations can rapidly increase.

Eggs and young larva are found on the higher leaves. Adults move down into the plant crown where they prefer to feed on the youngest growth. As the mites mature they will move out and then "stand up" on their tails and are dispersed by winds. The mites have such a great preference for timothy that if they land on a different species of plant, they will stand up and move again.

By mid-April, mite populations are rapidly building. By May, signs of heavy feeding can be noted by looking for the curled or drought characteristic. When summer temperatures arrive, the mite enters a dormancy period and is rarely observed on regrowth.

Scouting

Growers of timothy should begin to monitor their stands of timothy for this pest. Scouting procedures have not been fully developed, but producers can collect representative samples from across their field. Hand lenses are available from most camera stores or mail order catalogs. A minimum of 20-power is recommended. Look for the mite on the surface side of the leaf. Immature and adult mites are similar in shape, like a "rice kernel." Eggs can be seen in many cases. The egg resembles an extremely small, round ball and will be evident across the leaf surface. Most mites and eggs will be seen in between the veins on the leaf.

Remember that because of population dynamics, a few mites can rapidly develop into an economic problem. If you do not have access to a hand lens, look for curled leaves.

Identification

The cereal rust mite is an extremely small pest, actually one-sixteenth the size of a spider mite. You cannot observe them without a magnifying lens. The mites are shaped like a grain of rice, soft bodied, with four legs located near the head of this critter. They can move fairly easily up and down the leaves of the timothy plant but they prefer to feed on the youngest tissue of the plant. They are not commonly found on other grass species.

The cereal rust mite feeds on single cells at the base of the grooves between the veins on the timothy leaves. The mite inserts a "needle-like"

❖ Pasture Ponderings ❖

Duane Pysher
NRCS Pasture Specialist

Oh, the sight of green on the landscape. What a mental uplift to me, a non-winter person.

The return of green means the 2003 season of Pennsylvania grazing conferences is over. The featured speakers at three of the conferences were the Roche Brothers from Ireland. One of their talks dealt with the subject of the potential for pasture-based grazing dairy farms in the northeastern U.S. They concluded that there is a huge potential for these types of dairy enterprises. But interestingly, they also concluded that the U.S. can learn from the mistakes and successes that other countries have made with their grazing programs, and that you cannot directly transfer their systems into your region. You need to select key management practices from their systems which you can adapt, and then research them as part of your system.

It was interesting to hear them discuss this. All too often we hear that the only ones who know anything about grazing are from the "down under" in New Zealand (N.Z.) or from other foreign countries.

I would agree that N.Z. has done an outstanding job of developing and adapting grazing technologies within their livestock industry. They have done this perhaps better than any other country in the world. Theirs is a ryegrass-based system that uses high inputs of nitrogen fertilizer. Because of their predominately mild, moist, maritime climate, it works extremely well. However, when the idea comes up that we should adopt their system of grazing without modification and adaptation, I usually cringe. The comments from the Roche brothers made me feel good about my reservations.

Don't get me wrong. I feel we have a lot to learn from their grazing experiences and expertise. I believe that we need to make the proper modifications and adjustments to their ways to make them work within our climate and system limitations. When we are able to do this, we can make a good thing even better. I always think back to comments that my mentor, Tom Calvert, makes regarding grazing systems: "No two systems are exactly the same and if we try to exactly copy one farm's grazing system to another farm, one of those farms will have the wrong system because of the differences that exist between the two farms."

We can adapt key parts of the one system to the other, with modifications to overcome the differences, and have two functioning systems that meet both farms needs.

Another highlight of the Pennsylvania Grazing and Forage Conference was the Pennsylvania Forage and Grassland Council's (PFGC) annual meeting and awards ceremony. The PFGC presented several awards to exceptional individuals involved with the forage industry in Pennsylvania. One award was PFGC's Special Award presented to David Fink for his many outstanding contributions to PFGC and the hay industry. After Dave accepted his award, he made a few comments to the group and quoted Freeman Dyson, a physics professor at Princeton University. Dyson was one of 100 thinkers who were asked the question "What has been the most important invention of the past 2000 years?" Dyson answered the question with one word and that was "hay."

He went on to explain that in the Old World of Greece and Rome, there was no hay. Their civilization with horses could only exist in warmer climates where there were grasses to graze all year long. Sometime in the Dark Ages, some unknown genius invented hay. The land was managed to grow grass and the process of making hay allowed civilization to move northward into colder winter climates and thus, hay gave birth to London, Paris, Berlin and even New York and the United States. This all came about because of hay.

It is just hard to imagine what a large role hay has played in the expansion and development of our modern society. Something so simple, but yet so important. It is hard for me, a forage person, to realize how big a part hay played in this expansion. One would have expected the answer to be the computer or penicillin or some other modern-day invention.

I guess you are concluding that I came away from the conferences with some good information and ideas. You are correct. There was much to be learned from all the speakers and presentations. I know that there were more than 450 people in attendance at the three March grazing conferences where the Roche Brothers spoke. There were several other grazing conferences in the state during the year, and I know their attendance was up as well.

There is a lot of interest in grazing and that interest is growing each year. Next year there will be a similar series of grazing conferences and I hope you plan on attending at least one of them. Watch for the dates of these meetings and conferences in popular press magazines like Lancaster Farming and then get registered to attend.

The planning committee meets to decide on the featured speakers for the three grazing conferences (Northwest, PFGC, and Tioga and Bradford within the next few months. Should you have ideas on speakers you would like to hear or topics you would like to learn more about, let me know your thoughts and ideas.

I also would like to ask for ideas on subjects you would like to see me discuss in my column. I enjoy putting my thoughts down on paper. I get feedback from some of you regarding my "Ponderings" but I would like to hear from more of you. Perhaps I can share some of your experiences and stories with others.

In closing, I will share a conversation I had recently with one of my readers. In fact, it was just after the February issue of Foraging Around was published. Let's call him Aaron. Aaron tells me that he is a grazier and has been for several years. He is a topic of discussion for some of his friends and neighbors who wonder how he making a profit because his milk levels dropped since he went to grazing. He also has a side business that provides a limited amount of income, which his peers say is making him his only profit.

Well, Aaron's good friend and neighbor challenged him to put his recordbook on the table and compare bottom lines. Aaron was reluctant, as most of us would be, but because of continued encouragement to do so, he finally relented. At the end of the comparison, the neighbor realized that Aaron's profit-per-cow was more than $100 per cow greater than his own. The analysis did not include the side income. A successful grazing story.

New PFGC President To Promote Grass-Based Marketing, Youth Programs

DAVE LEFEVER
Lancaster Farming Staff

GRANTVILLE (Dauphin Co.) — Tim Fritz of King's AgriSeeds has been named the new Pennsylvania Forage and Grassland Council president for a year's term.

Fritz grew up on a dairy farm near Bridgeport, Lancaster County, and went on to graduate from Penn State in 1986 with a bachelor's degree in agronomy. He then traveled to Washington State University to earn his master's degree in the field.

Returning to his home state in 1988, Fritz went to work as an agronomy and dairy agent for Penn State Cooperative Extension in Montgomery County, a position he held until 1997.

In the early 1990s, Fritz began to take an interest in grass-based production and "got the grazing bug," he said.

He credits Brian Moyer, a dairy farmer then in Montgomery County and now a grazier in Bradford County, for influencing his shift toward grazing and grassland systems.

In 1993-1994, Fritz helped convert the Fritz family farm to a grazing dairy. Then, in 1997, he moved to Springfield, Tenn., to assist his brother Jack Fritz with his new dairy operation there.

He returned to Pennsylvania in 1999 and worked as farm management agent for Lancaster and Chester Counties until 2001, when he took a job as an Ampac Seeds representative.

In mid-June of last year, he went to work as agronomist for King's Agri-Seeds, covering "about the whole state of Pennsylvania" in his travels.

Fritz said his goals as PFGC president will be to "continue to see us have a focus on applied production and a balance between grazing and hay production."

He also intends to promote more marketing of grass-based products, a move that, at least in part, comes from personal experience with a new way of eating. Fritz said he has been following for about a year the research on the health benefits of a grass-based diet for humans.

"I now personally eat a lot of that food," Fritz said, noting that he has found local sources of grass-fed beef and poultry. "It really does taste better."

He is also looking for a local producer of pasteurized, grass-fed milk.

In seeking ways to help graziers market their unique products, "I'm still learning where the opportunities are," Fritz said.

He said he will also help promote a new youth program, organized in part by Pennsylvania's Project Grass, in which FFA and 4-H kids will participate in pasture evaluation contests.

Fritz lives in Atglen with his wife Carolyn and children Ashley, 12; Taylor, 10; Harrison, 7; and Madison, 6.

Study Looks At Yield and Persistence Of Bolting-Resistant Chicory Varieties

Matt A. Sanderson
USDA-ARS
University Park

A challenge in managing forage chicory is dealing with "bolting" or rapid growth of the flower stalks in spring.

Varieties with reduced bolting potential are available. In a three-year field-plot study at Rocksprings, we evaluated commercial forage varieties and European root-type varieties of chicory for yield, bolting, and persistence under clipping.

'Grasslands Puna', 'Lacerta', and 'Forage Feast' forage-type chicory, and 'Dagerrad', 'Halle', and 'Katrein' root-crop chicory cultivars were sown in field plots in May 1999. Forage yield was measured monthly and the percentage of bolting was estimated visually.

The varieties did not differ in forage dry matter yield in 2000 (average of 6,700 pounds dry matter/acre). Grasslands Puna and Lacerta yielded more dry matter than other varieties in 2001.

Chicory varieties differed in their persistence and degree of bolting. More than 80 percent of Lacerta chicory plants bolted during both years, and Lacerta suffered an 89 percent loss of plants during 1999 to 2002. Less than 50 percent of Forage Feast and the root-type chicory plants bolted, but these varieties did not produce as much dry matter and were less persistent than Puna.

After three years, Puna had the highest plant density (nine plants per square foot) and Lacerta the lowest (two plants per square foot). Forage Feast had 5 plants per square foot and the European varieties averaged 6 plants per square foot after three years. The results indicate that some chicory varieties show less bolting but have lower levels of persistence than other varieties.

Virginia Grazing School Draws Diverse Group

GAY BROWNLEE
Virginia Correspondent

HARRISONBURG, Va. — Virginia Tech forage experts conducted the 2nd Annual Virginia Grazing School here March 20-21. Owing to heavy rains, they revised the agenda after a scheduled farm visit had to be postponed.

"We made the executive decision to not stand in a mud hole," said Ray Smith, Virginia forage extension specialist.

The next day — the first full day of spring — turned out clear and sunny for visiting the local farm where participants were asked to plan a grazing system using field and soil maps.

"Goal Setting and Planning" was a key topic offered during the indoor part of the program. This session was designed to help the farmer determine his or her status, where he/she wants to go and, finally, how to get there.

In another session, Chris Teutsch, forage researcher, spoke on plant physiology. Teutsch covered plant response to grazing, drought and other environmental factors; photosynthesis, transpiration and respiration; and carbohydrate production and use.

"Where carbohydrates are determines how you manage that plant," Teutsch said, discussing the location of a plant's carbohydrate reserves in relation to its ability to produce regrowth.

Ray Smith outlined various forage species characteristics, including the response of plant species to grazing and other stresses; the optimal management for different forage species; competition in pastures, and identifying forage species that help extend the grazing season.

Smith noted the recent discovery of a 100-foot-long alfalfa root in a Colorado mine. The plant obviously had found the moisture it was seeking deeper in the earth.

"Alfalfa in Virginia," Smith said, "probably would not reach a 100-foot depth as it did in Colorado because our soil is too acidic."

Smith also conducted a session on the hands-on identification of forage species. He said that kura clover is probably the most difficult of the clovers to establish.

Jon Repair, extension forage agent, spoke on the importance of having fresh nitrogen-fixing bacteria to inoculate legume seeds.

"It's better to inoculate seed yourself than to buy seed that is pre-inoculated," Repair said. A problem with buying pre-inoculated seed is that farmers often don't know the amount of time that passed since it was inoculated.

Mike Phillips, a grazier near Harrisonburg, spoke about his experiences with bermudagrass.

The recent, prolonged Virginia drought was the springboard for Phillips' bermudagrass experiments.

The bermudagrass he seeded survived two winters before this past winter. It remains to be seen what impact this year's colder-than-usual weather may have had.

"This was the winter to prove whether or not bermudagrass is cold-tolerant," Phillips said.

No matter how well bermudagrass does for Phillips, he said he will continue to grow cool season forages such as alfalfa.

Other topics explored at the school included soils and fertility; forage quality; and the economics of forage systems and risk assessment.

Beside Smith, Teutsch, and Repair, Virginia Tech specialists contributing to the school included Joe Tritscher, small ruminant extension specialist; Greg Mullins, nutrient management specialist; Gordon Groover, extension economist; Glen Johnson, NRCS state forage agronomist; and Susan Gay, agricultural engineering specialist.

PFGC ❖ SPECIAL REPORT ❖

Stream Bank Fencing And Riparian Buffers Benefit Farmers

David Wise
Chesapeake Bay Foundation

Stream bank fencing and buffers can benefit livestock producers in a number of ways. These include:

• Improved herd health. Clean, dry cattle are healthier cattle. Wet, muddy conditions increase the risk of mastitis, foot problems, and other serious illnesses. Controlled access at stabilized crossings also reduces foot and leg injuries from steep, slippery banks, and rock creek bottoms.

• Improved biosecurity. Water is a very effective means for spreading many disease organisms. Efforts to control disease on one farm may be undone if livestock have unlimited contact with a stream used by other herds upstream. Stream bank fencing can improve biosecurity on the farm and for other producers downstream.

• Better drinking water for livestock. Milk cows are particularly sensitive to drinking water quality and will decrease their intake if water quality is poor. Better water quality promotes high intake, which is needed for higher levels of milk production.

• Options for pasture management. Stream bank fencing splits a typical pasture in two. Once the electrified stream bank fence is in place, creating additional paddocks is cheap and easy. Improved management options can significantly increase the efficiency of pasture use.

• Good public relations. Agencies and the public are increasingly aware of farm management, especially how it affects streams. Stream bank fencing is a very noticeable commitment to clean water and a strong "good neighbor" policy.

• Stewardship of the land. Buffers provide habitat for a host of wildlife from songbirds to waterfowl to game animals. Improvements to fish habitat are large and rapid. Reduced bank erosion protects property like fields, buildings, lanes, and bridges.

THE ERGONOMICS OF USING A BRILLION "SURE STAND" SEEDER

Grass seed is a very expensive commodity. By properly placing the grass seed in the top 1/2" of a properly prepared seedbed you will realize maximum seed germination.

Because of Brillion's precision placement of the seeds, seeding rates can often be cut to nearly half of the rates previously used

In many cases the savings in seed alone will pay for a "Sure Stand" Seeder in just a short time

Don't risk your crop to another system. Don't settle for less. Use the one seeding method that you can depend on to produce a top stand time after time ..a Brillion Sure Stand Seeder.

Pros and Cons Of Methods To Speed Hay Drying

C. Alan Rotz
USDA-ARS Ag Engineer

High quality forage is recognized as an important requirement for maintaining maximum production of cattle, particularly in dairy production.

The greatest obstacle to producing high quality hay is rapid field curing. In our climate, adequate periods without rainfall are sporadic and hard to predict.

Conditioning Methods

Mechanical conditioning treatments are often used to speed hay drying. These can be categorized as either roll or flail conditioners. Rolls smash and/or break the plant stems, and flails abrade the waxy surface of the plant and break stems.

Both processes can improve drying. For alfalfa, however, roll devices are more effective — with less field loss.

Some roll designs are promoted for faster drying, but field and laboratory studies consistently show little or no difference in the drying of alfalfa or grass treated with commonly used crushing roll designs. Roll conditioning is most effective on a thick stemmed crop such as an early cutting of alfalfa. Flail type conditioners are better suited to grass crops, and they provide a greater throughput capacity when harvesting high yielding or entangled crops.

Adjustment of the conditioning mechanism can effect drying. Roll clearance and pressure often can be adjusted. A minimum clearance must be maintained. If the clearance becomes too close, excessive damage and loss of plant particles occurs. With too much clearance, plant material can flow between the rolls with little crushing. Too little or too much pressure on the rolls has similar effects. On flail type conditioners, the clearance between the rotating flails and a stationary bar can be adjusted to control the amount of breaking and abrasion that occurs.

Dry matter losses and the associated nutrient changes caused or promoted by conditioning increase with crop maturity and the severity of conditioning. Although more severe conditioning can provide faster field curing, harvest losses are generally greater. Normally moderate conditioning is recommended to obtain adequate drying with relatively low loss (1-2 percent of yield). This relatively low loss has little effect on forage quality.

Swath Manipulation

As forage dries in the field, the top of the swath dries more rapidly than the bottom. Manipulation of the swath can speed the drying process by moving the wetter material to the upper surface. There are three operations used in haymaking to manipulate the swath: tedding, swath inversion, and raking.

Tedding can be used anytime during field curing, but it is best to do so before the crop is too dry (above 40 percent moisture content). The stirring or fluffing of forage typically reduces field-curing time up to half a day. Tedders are sometimes used to spread a narrow swath formed by the mower-conditioner over the entire field surface. When done soon after mowing, the average field curing time is reduced up to two days compared to drying in a narrow swath. In addition to speeding drying, tedding also tends to create more uniform drying, so wet spots in the swath are reduced.

Disadvantages of tedding include increased losses and increased fuel, labor, and machinery costs. When tedding is done on a relatively wet crop (above 50 percent moisture), the resulting loss is less than 3 percent. However, applied late in the drying process, the loss can be more than 10 percent. Tedding will also increase raking loss. When a light crop (less than 1 ton/acre) is spread over the field surface, raking loss can be more than double that when raking narrow swaths.

Spreading the hay may also promote bleaching of hay color. Bleaching does not necessarily affect the nutritive value of hay, but it often affects the market value. When the costs of performing the tedding operation are compared to the benefit received, routine use of tedding is difficult to justify, particularly for alfalfa. Occasional use under difficult drying conditions may bring greater economic benefit.

Swath inversion machines have been used that gently lift and invert the swath. Exposing the wetter bottom of the swath speeds drying, reducing the average field-curing time a few hours. Swath inversion is not as effective for improving drying as tedding, but shatter loss is very low. With less drying benefit, there is less potential for reducing rain and respiration losses. The added labor, fuel, and machinery costs of the operation are generally greater than the benefit received.

Raking is another form of swath manipulation. Raking tends to roll the wetter hay from the bottom of the swath to the outer surface of the windrow, which improves drying. Following the initial improvement, the increase in swath density can reduce drying rate, so the crop moisture content at raking is important. Raking also causes loss, and the loss is related to crop moisture (2 percent when wet to 15 percent in a very dry crop). The best moisture content to rake for low loss and good drying is between 30 and 40 percent. In dry weather periods, hay can be raked in the evening or early morning when leaves are moist and less prone to shatter. Raking at the proper time can reduce field-curing time a few hours to allow an earlier start to baling.

In haymaking, the best recommendation is to dry hay rapidly. Mechanical conditioning should be used, and high yielding crops should be spread in wide swaths. Tedding may be useful in drying grass crops, but it should be avoided with alfalfa, particularly after the crop has partially dried.

In silage making, drying is a little less critical. Wilting in narrow swaths can reduce raking loss, particularly for low yielding harvests. Raking can be used to improve harvest capacity. A substantial economic benefit can often be obtained by rolling swaths together to allow large balers or forage harvesters to operate more efficiently.

Conclusions

Rapid field curing is important and a good mechanical conditioner can help. Spread hay in wide swaths to further speed drying, but avoid very thin swaths to reduce raking loss. Tedding may be useful in drying grass crops, but it should be avoided with alfalfa, particularly after the crop has partially dried.

Bale hay at about 18 percent moisture in low-density bales, but use a lower moisture content for high-density large bales. Avoid routine baling of high moisture hay. When damp hay is baled, use an organic acid based treatment to help preserve hay.

Remember that on the dairy farm, only about one third of the forage needs to be of the highest quality when that forage is segregated by quality and fed to animal groups accordingly.

CONSERVATION PROGRAMS

Agricultural Conservation Easement Purchase Program slows the loss of prime farmland through the purchase of permanent conservation easements (or development rights) from owners of quality farmland by state, county and loc program compensates landowners for the development value, in return for maintaining the land as open space Farmers may choose to receive the proceeds from easement sales in a lump sum payment or installments. For more inform county's agricultural land preservation board or the Pennsylvania Department of Agriculture's Bureau of Farmland Preservation at 717-783-3167.

Agriculture-Linked Investment Program (AgriLink) provides low interest loans to implement management practices that are part of an approved nutrient management plan. It is a cooperative effort of the Pennsylvania Treasury Depa Conservation Commission, local commercial banks and offices of the Farm Credit Service. The costs of manure storage facilities, barnyard management facilities, terraces, waterways and diversions are some of the practices that may b loans. After the county conservation district approves a nutrient management plan, the farmer should request an estimate of the construction costs for the desired practices, and then seek a loan. For more information or an application, bank, Farm Credit Service office, local conservation district office, or the Pennsylvania State Conservation Commission at 717-772-8821.

Agricultural Management Assistance (AMA) provides cost-share assistance to establish rotational grazing, construct or improve water management structures, plant trees for windbreaks or to improve water quality and mitigate risk th diversification or resource conservation practices, including soil erosion control, integrated pest management, or a transition to organic farming. There is a 5- to 10-year contract period, with payments up to $50,000 for any fiscal year. Si with periodic ranking cutoff dates as determined by the state conservationist. AMA may be combined with other programs, providing even greater benefits in some cases. For more information or an application, contact your county's USD Resources Conservation Service or Conservation District, or http://www.nrcs.usda.gov/programs/ama/.

Chesapeake Bay Foundation's Farm Stewardship Program (FSP) provides financial and technical assistance to create wooded stream buffers and fence cattle out of wetlands in Pennsylvania's Chesapeake Bay Watershed (land whe the Susquehanna or Potomac Rivers and eventually the Bay) with 15-year contracts. CBF typically pays the full cost of the fence system and plantings, and the landowner is responsible for costs of stabilized crossings and/or watering acc each acre of buffers wider than 15 feet or each acre of fenced wetlands, farmers earn up to $1,000 in "BMP credits" to pay for their portion of costs for stabilized stream crossings and/or other practices. FSP is designed to fill gaps in which both pay more. Buffer specialists for your area and more information are available by calling CBF's Harrisburg office at 717-234-5550.

Chesapeake Bay Program Financial Assistance Program provides cost-share funds for best management practices included in nutrient management plans, primarily for manure management in the Susquehanna and Potomac River w with a 10-year agreement. The included practices will help manage nutrients from animal manure produced on commercial livestock and poultry operations and other nutrients (sludge, septage, chemical fertilizers, organic wastes, etc.) us production. The cost-share program currently supports up to 80% (up to $30,000) of the costs of practices for barnyard runoff management, composting, permanent vegetative cover, animal waste management, stripcropping, terraces, di land protection, critical area protection, waterways, cropland protection, conservation tillage, stream protection, sediment and erosion control, soil and manure analysis, excess manure management, and fertilizer management. The Penns Department of Environmental Protection manages this program. For more information or an application, contact your county's Conservation District office, or http://www.dep.state.pa.us/dep/deputate/watermgt/wc/subjects/cdnm/FACTS

Conservation Reserve Enhancement Program (CREP) provides cost-share and adds the bonus of annual rental payments for a wide variety of conservation practices. Buffers and selected other practices with highest benefits to water qua payments, making them particularly attractive. CREP was originally available only in the 20 southern counties in Pennsylvania's Chesapeake Bay watershed, but will expand to include the entire watershed in Pennsylvania by Summer 2003. Pro 10- to 15-year contract available at any time. CREP is typically the best paying option for the many practices it supports. Contact your county's USDA Farm Service Agency or Conservation District, or see http://www.fsa.usda.gov/dafp/cer

Conservation Reserve Program (CRP) General Enrollment provides annual rental payments and up to 50% of the cost to establish long-term, resource-conserving covers on fields previously planted to an agricultural commodity, that cropped wetlands, or dedicated to highly beneficial environmental practices such as filter strips, riparian buffers, grass waterways, shelter belts, wellhead protection areas, and other similar practices in 10- to 15-year contracts. For more application, contact your county's USDA Farm Service Agency or Conservation District, or see http://www.fsa.usda.gov/dafp/cepd/crp.htm.

Continuous Enrollment Conservation Reserve Program (CCRP) is similar to the CRP General Enrollment except that it focuses on smaller parcels of land that provide especially high environmental benefits, and allows enrollment in contracts at any time, without a competitive bidding process. Offers are automatically accepted, provided the acreage and producer meet certain eligibility requirements. Enrolled land may be used for riparian buffers, contour grass strips waterways, shelter belts, field windbreaks, living snow fences, wellhead protection areas, or shallow water areas for wildlife. CCRP is a strong alternative where CREP is unavailable. For more information or an application, contact your cou Service Agency or Conservation District, or see http://www.fsa.usda.gov/pas/publications/facts/crpcont.pdf.

Ducks Unlimited Habitat Stewardship Program provides financial and technical assistance to create and restore wetlands, fence streambanks and create wooded stream buffers with 15-year contracts. It pays the full cost of wetlands rest and also supports streambank fencing and riparian buffers at 80%. Ducks Unlimited works both inside and outside the Chesapeake Bay watershed For more information, call Scott Reinhart at 570-727-2537 in eastern Pennsylvania or C 814-832-4676 in western Pennsylvania.

Emergency Conservation Program (ECP) provides funding for farmers and ranchers to rehabilitate farmland damaged by wind erosion, drought, floods, hurricanes, or other natural disasters, and for carrying out water conservation measures severe drought. The program may support debris removal, providing water for livestock, fence restoration, grading and shaping of farmland, restoring conservation structures, and water conservation measures. County Farm Services Agen committees set eligibility for ECP assistance and cost-share levels up to 64 percent. # Omega-3 Fat, Vitamin Content Boosted In Pastured Poultry Eggs

H.D. Karsten,
P.H. Patterson,
G.W. Crews, and R.C. Stout
Crop and Soil Sciences and Poultry Science Departments
Penn State

Our previous pasture plant research indicated that when compared at similar stages of maturity, legumes on average contained more omega-3 fat (linolenic acid) content than grasses. We were interested in whether plant species omega-3 fat content differences would affect pastured poultry hen egg fat content, and how omega-3 fat and vitamins A and E content of eggs of pastured hens (supplemented with commercial mash) would compare to hens fed only commercial mash.

Our objectives were to compare omega-3 fat content of pasture species (alfalfa, red and white clover, grass) foraged by hens; and compare egg yolk omega-3 fat, vitamin A and E content of hens pastured on the three pasture species and supplemented with commercial mash, to the egg yolks of indoor caged hens fed commercial mash.

Three established stands of predominantly alfalfa, red and white clover, or mixed cool-season grasses (orchardgrass, smooth bromegrass, quackgrass, tall fescue, Kentucky bluegrass) were foraged by three groups of brown egg pullets (25 hens per group, less than 17 weeks of age) for three two-week periods in July and August 2002 in State College. After each two-week period, hen groups were rotated to a different pasture species. Pastures were maintained at early- to mid-vegetative stages of development throughout the six-week trial. Pastured hens received commercial mash, and calcium, water, and pasture ad libitum. Concurrently, caged hens managed in a commercial facility were fed a mash diet and water ad libitum. Plucked samples of the three pastures were analyzed for fatty acid content. Egg yolks from the hens foraging the three pasture treatments and the caged treatment group were analyzed for omega-3 fatty acid, cholesterol, vitamin A and E content.

Results & Summary

Legume plant tissues had more omega-3 fat than grass; red and white clover had more omega-3 fat than alfalfa. Eggs of hens that foraged legume pastures had more omega-3 fat than hens that foraged on grass pastures. Omega-3 fat, vitamin A and E content were higher in eggs of hens that foraged pasture (& supplemented with commercial mash) than hens fed commercial mash only (pastured vs. caged eggs: 2.7 fold more omega-3 fat; 2.1 fold more vitamin E; and 41 percent greater vitamin A); cholesterol didn't differ among any treatments. Omega-3 fat and vitamin content increased with time on pasture, but didn't change over time in caged birds' eggs.

Maryland Pasture Walk Scheduled

Bus From Lancaster/Chester Area Available

A Pasture Walk is scheduled for Wednesday, April 23, from 10:30 a.m. until 1:30 p.m. at St. Brigid's Farm, Kennedyville, Maryland. Judy Gifford and Dr. Robert Fry will host the event.

St. Brigid's Farm is home to 158 registered Jersey cattle on just 55 acres. Management intensive grazing is the backbone of the operation with irrigation assisting the grasses and legumes to continue growth during the dry periods, supplying the high quality forages necessary to maintain the high levels of milk production. This will be the sixth year for the operation, all being seasonally based with the winter as the dry period.

Lunch will be available at the farm. Althought there is no fee for lunch, advanced registration is required. Car/van pools will be leaving from Hagerstown and Frederick. For lunch reservations and carpool information, contact the Washington County Extension Office at (301) 791-1304 or the Frederick County Extension Office at (301) 631-3576. The last van will leave the Frederick Extension Office at 8 a.m. and return at 4 pm.

The purpose of the pasture walk is to allow livestock producers a chance to learn more about the use of rotational grazing as a way to increase agricultural profitability. Time will be spent walking through the pastures discussing plant growth, fencing, watering systems, irrigation, and animal performance.

The farm is located at 12246 Locust Grove Road, Kennedyville.

For those in the Lancaster/Chester county area interested in traveling by bus to the pasture walk, call King's Agri-Seed's for reservations at (717) 687-6224.

SARE Calls For Grant Preproposals

BURLINGTON, Vt. — The Northeast Region Sustainable Agriculture Research and Education (SARE) program, which funds research and education grants and professional development grants, is calling for preproposals for the next SARE funding cycle. A preproposal is a brief, one-page summary of key project themes and results, and is part of the SARE selection process. Only those whose preproposal has been approved can go on to develop a full proposal.

This year, there is a specific interest in projects that address sustainable livestock production, dairy economic viability and profitability, the sale of foods to local institutions, farm labor management, and the transition to a new farm enterprise. People with projects in these areas are particularly encouraged to apply.

Preproposal materials are available on the World Wide Web at www.uvm.edu. Follow the link to "grant and application information" and download the forms and instructions. Or, if you prefer printed materials, call or e-mail the Northeast SARE office at (802) 656-0471 and nesare uvm.edu. Preproposals must be postmarked by May 16.

Lancaster County Pasture Walks Set

LANCASTER (Lancaster Co.) — The Lancaster County Graziers and Lancaster County Extension have announced the first pasture walks of the season.

All of these pasture walks will take place from 10 a.m. until 1:30 p.m. They afford graziers the opportunity to learn from each other by hearing and observing what other folks are doing. Please pack a lunch, unless otherwise noted. Drinks will be provided by the host farm.

The following pasture walks have been set:

• June 19 — Arden Landis Farm, 667 Puseyville Rd, Kirkwood (717) 529-6644 (Located two miles south of the Solanco Fairgrounds at the junction of Rt. 472 and Puseyville Rd.) # Grazing Turned This Dairy Farm Around

Sons Can Now Join Their Father In Farming

Dan Demaine
Cornell Extension
Cortland County, N.Y.

The story of David Surprenant and his family farm is getting around among New York State dairy farmers. David farms with his wife and their two sons in Manteno, Illinois, and was a featured speaker at the dairy grazing conference series that swept across the state in January. His story is about how grazing turned around the farm business and opened up the possibility that his sons could join him in dairy farming.

David Surprenant began taking over the family farm from his father when he bought half of the cows in 1977, and then bought the other half in 1979. Through his initial years in farming, David attempted to follow the accepted model for dairy farming but found he was continually falling behind.

He had developed a good relationship with University of Illinois professor Michael Hutjens and asked him on a regular basis what size his dairy needed to be in order to be profitable. That size grew through the years and David felt he was spinning his wheels, continually expanding without ever getting ahead financially. Finally, in the early 1990s, he was told that he would need to expand to 150 cows, which required him to build an entirely new facility. He was not ready to make that step and decided instead to pursue some stories he had heard about grazing.

David learned about grazing through magazine articles and decided to pursue it on a small scale. A New Holland magazine told about the Patterson brothers who were grazing in Kentucky. David called them up and asked how they were doing. They were a big help, and also introduced him to Dave Forgey in Indiana, who had started grazing the year before.

David's farm is 160 acres in a square, set up in four 40-acre fields. He started by turning one of those fields into pasture and over the next few years, all four fields became pasture. Although the transition wasn't easy, David could soon see that the financial picture on the farm was improving. He hired a consultant from Wisconsin who had worked for several years in New Zealand and advised David to "plant fence posts instead of grass seed."

Unfortunately, David's pastures were slow to develop. He attributes this to soils that had been depleted to less than 2 percent organic matter by years of corn and soybeans. Even now, after nearly 10 years in pasture, several of David's paddocks still have not developed into the thick, lush sod that he would like. After experimenting with several different pasture types he has found that a mix of species, including orchardgrass, soft leaf tall fescue, and white clover, works best for him. He does believe that perennial ryegrass has a place on his farm but only in a limited amount as it does not grow in hot and dry conditions and had a complete winter kill a few years ago.

Breeding

Experience with grazing has led David to an evolving perspective on what breed of cows to use and how to feed them on pasture. He began with a registered Holstein herd and with the feeding philosophy that all his cows needed was a little bit of grain. This resulted in breeding difficulties and loss of body condition. He decided to purchase a herd of Jerseys in order to begin cross breeding and producing cows that would be better grazers.

Grazing Turned Farm Around

However, he didn't get the results David had hoped for. The Jerseys and their cross-bred progeny lacked the production he expected and had a temperament that he found unacceptable.

David's current thought is to stay with Holsteins but to provide more supplementation to them. He aims for the cows to get 50 percent of their dry matter intake from pasture with the balance coming from 13 pounds of shell corn, 5 pounds corn silage, and 5 pounds of soy hulls. He is also selecting Holstein sires that are smaller in stature, have deep bellies, and are high in components. While he had been pursuing a spring seasonal herd, David now has a calving season in the fall and one in the spring with roughly half the herd calving in each.

Irrigation Challenges

In the last few years, David has experimented with irrigation to extend the pasture season. A creek runs along the border of his farm and provides an excellent source for irrigation. In 2001, he purchased a traveling hose irrigator and used it on a limited basis. But he started too late and wasn't able to graze through a dry spell as he hoped. This past summer was even drier and he started irrigating at the start of the drought. While he was able to continue grazing for most of the summer, David is now having second thoughts about the wisdom of irrigating as opposed to purchasing forage to replace pasture.

Irrigating required a lot of extra labor, tractor use, and headaches this past year and made it harder to accomplish other jobs in a timely manner. Counting the use of a tractor on the irrigation pump, a tractor to move the irrigator from paddock to paddock, his labor, the depreciation on the irrigation equipment, and fuel and repairs, David calculates it cost him nearly $25,000 to irrigate for 120 days this past year. He feels that is roughly the same cost as purchasing the same amount of dairy quality forage need to replace the droughty pasture and is seriously considering whether to irrigate or purchase forage in the future.

Measuring Dry Matter

David has also been interested in measuring and improving the amount of pasture dry matter that his cows get from pasture. When he first started grazing, he didn't have a good handle on how to judge the amount of pasture to allocate to the cows. He decided to purchase an Allistair George electronic capacitance meter to help him measure the pasture dry matter. The meter cost $,1200 and allowed David to quickly measure the dry matter in each paddock and put together a rotation plan. While he relied on the meter quite heavily in his first few years using pasture, David has not used it much in the last few and feels that the meter allowed him to train his eyes.

A more recent technique he has used to increase dry matter intake on pasture is to clip the paddocks before the cows enter them. This past summer, David used a rotary mower to mow down paddocks 24 hours before the cows entered them. This greatly cut down on refusals and increased the amount of pasture the cows were consuming. It took about 45 minutes to cut down each four-acre paddock and he found that cows preferred the cut forage to any that was left standing near the fence row.

The Bottom Line

Grazing has turned the Surprenant farm around financially, from just breaking even to making money. In the mid to late 1980s as a confinement dairy, David's net profit/loss from his Schedule F form

Rotational Grazing Makes Financial Sense For New York Dairy

Jim Grace
Cornell Coop. Extension
Peter Mapstone
Pastureland Dairy

Pastureland Dairy, located in Onondaga County, is owned and operated by Peter Mapstone and his family. The transition to rotational grazing began in 1987 when Pete returned home from college. At Cornell, Pete chose to do a business analysis of the family farm as a class project. He discovered that purchased grain and concentrate accounted for approximately 50 percent of milk sales. Pete realized that a change was necessary to improve profitability.

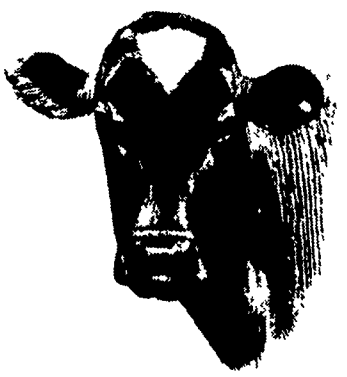
One potential change that Pete considered was a major expansion, but projections indicated that a large expansion would not generate enough cash to meet cash commitments. Making a transition to rotational grazing appeared to offer an opportunity to generate more profits, while maximizing available resources.

Milk production did not decline when the Mapstones adopted rotational grazing. The farm presently sells 21,084 pounds per cow. Moreover, the operating cost per hundredweight of producing milk declined significantly. Pastureland Dairy incurs operating expenses of $9.28 per hundredweight. Purchased grain and concentrate is now down to 17 percent of milk sales. Even though the herd has grown by 50 percent since 1987 to 170 cows, total purchased feed costs are only 15 percent higher.

The transition to rotational grazing began by fully utilizing all existing pastures. Instead of pumping water uphill to paddocks, the Mapstones dug a pond to supply water via gravity. Cost control is a key factor to achieving above average profitability at Pastureland Dairy. For over five years, a pre-owned $50 three wheeler was utilized to move cattle. Five years ago, the farm purchased a used four wheeler. The Mapstones reduced cropping costs by growing less corn; they now grow 70 acres of corn, down from 200 acres.

Making a change to grazing has produced results that transcend economic benchmark information. Pastureland Dairy has experienced improvements in overall herd health. For example, there are fewer displaced abomasums and retained placentas. A low cull rate has allowed for internal growth of 50 percent since 1987.

In 1991, Pete purchased the herd from his father, Robert. That year, Robert and Pete also agreed to a rental arrangement to allow for equipment and facilities leases. Pete is gradually acquiring equity in equipment by paying for new machinery when it is replaced. In 1997 he purchased a neighboring farm to allow for expanded grazing. Heifers were moved from the main farm onto the recently purchased farm that spring, after the Mapstones constructed new fences around pastures. This allowed for enlarging heifer stalls on the main farm to accommodate cows and expand the milking herd from within. Continual expansion necessitated replacing the bulk tank with a larger model.



Increased cow numbers brought about the need to improve milking efficiency. An eight-stall flat barn parlor was an economical alternative to constructing a milking parlor. Milkers are able to achieve a through-put rate of 60 cows per hour by utilizing this setup.

A major cropping change in 1996 was replacing alfalfa hay crop silage with grass hay crop silage. This provides a smoother transition from confinement feeding in the winter to pasture-based feeding in the grazing season. In dry years, supplemental feeding of hay crop silage is necessary to provide for nutrient requirements.

One goal Pete cited was acquiring more land to allow for a constantly increasing herd. He hopes to expand cow numbers in the future to maximize the farm's grazing capacity, which would be approximately 200 cows. Also under consideration are constructing a greenhouse facility to house calves. If this is successful, such housing may be constructed for heifers and dry cows.

There are numerous reasons why Pastureland Dairy has succeeded in utilizing rotational grazing. However, Pete gives much of the credit to his father Robert, who has provided excellent management advice, as well as labor. A benchmark that illustrates Pastureland Dairy's success as a business is a rate of return on all capital of 27.3 percent

OAK HILL, N.Y. — Dines Farms, in cooperation with Cornell Cooperative Extension, is inviting all interested producers to see the new USDA inspected livestock processing facility and meet the owners, father and son Jay and Matt Dines and Jon Payton.

On Saturday, May 10, the Dines will host an open house from 10:30 a.m.-2 p.m. at their facility, which is located on Dingman Road off Rt. 81 in Oak Hill (in Greene County just south of the Albany County Line.)

The Dines and Payton have been slaughtering, processing, and marketing their own livestock at this location under New York State (NYS) inspection since 1996. They built this facility a year and a half ago because their markets were growing and they could not find reliable processing for their increasing volume of poultry and rabbits. They can provide custom slaughter and processing of poultry, rabbits, small ruminants and swine.

In the future, they may be looking to purchase animals for their ever-increasing markets. At this writing, they are in the process of getting their USDA inspection stamp. They should oe able to offer this service by the end of spring.

Livestock producers are invited to the open house to see the facility and learn what can be marketed under NYS inspection vs. USDA inspection. Lunch will feature a sampling of Dines Farms products. To register and get directions, call Billie-Jo at Cornell Cooperative Extension of Albany County at (518) 765-3512.

ranged from a loss of $10,000 to a profit of $20,000 with a five year average of a $4,000 profit. From 1997 through 2002, David's profit ranged from $12,000 to $120,000 per year with an average of $50,000.

In addition, in the last 10 years, the herd has expanded from 50-60 cows to near 160 from internal growth. The increases in profitability and cow numbers have allowed David to realistically think about bringing his sons, aged 13 and 7, into the business. To him, this is one of the greatest benefits of grazing because it presents an opportunity for young rural people to stay involved in production agriculture on the home farm.

New York Producers Getting A Handle On Cattle

Martha Wright
and Adam Matthews
Cornell University

Operating a small beef farm is a balancing act between maintaining a profitable market for the cattle and managing cost. More marketing opportunities are available to beef producers that vaccinate their cattle prior to weaning and to those that precondition cattle to feed-bunks and stored feeds. To accomplish these tasks, producers need adequate facilities to prevent injuries to operator and animal.

Due to a lack of facilities and time, producers often do not vaccinate or participate in collaborative marketing programs. As a result, many beef producers miss out on opportunities that could benefit their farms and their cattle.

Martha Wright, livestock specialist with the NWNY Dairy, Livestock, and Field Crops Team, has been working to solve these problems and help beef producers make the most of their resources through better cooperation and coordination. One of her main efforts has been helping farmers build their own cattle handling facilities. With proper facilities, the time required to handle cattle is minimal. Developing handling facilities allows producers to do regular health checks, AI, pregnancy examinations, and whole herd vaccinations.

The NY Beef Quality Assurance (BQA) program certifies beef producers as BQA compliant if they pass specified standards. The program requires producers to have a way of safely handling cattle. Commercial handling facilities are available through many equipment dealers, but are often too expensive. Homemade facilities can be built with less cost to the producers.

While homemade facilities are less expensive than the commercial alternative, many producers do not have the capability to build facilities on their own. Martha Wright believed that by working together with other local producers, proper handling facilities could be constructed in a team effort on each farm.

Wright identified the CCE Grants Program For Innovative Small Farm Education offered by Cornell's Small Farms Program as a great way to further her efforts. She worked with an established discussion group of beef producers in Seneca County to develop a proposal for a grant for a "Cattle Handling Systems" project. This was designed to help producers plan and construct affordable handling systems for their livestock.

Wright's expectation was that participants would learn humane handling techniques for working with livestock and then share that experience with other farmers through dialogue during farm tours. With a proper handling system in place, producers would be able to utilize vaccination programs, improve herd health, increase marketing options, and see increased profits.

As part of the small farms grant, beef producers toured the Cornell Beef Teaching & Research Center in Harford to evaluate home-made facilities built in 1998.

The initial program participants were selected from an established discussion group of beef producers in Seneca County that helped develop the project proposal. Additional participants were recruited through articles in farm publications and by word of mouth. Meetings rotated through different farms so that producers could evaluate existing facilities and plan a course of action for new facilities. Producers interested in the project who could not attend meetings were provided with printed materials and/or on-site visits.

Sixteen producers toured the Cornell Beef Teaching and Research Center on July 11, 2002. Producers visited the main beef unit and a satellite working facility, participating in an interactive cattle-handling demonstration at both sites. They were able to study a wooden corral, squeeze alley, holding chute, and a purchased head catchall constructed for less than $1,500. This is equivalent to the cost of three feeder calves or two

Producers Getting A Handle On Cattle

Producers also toured the Outdoor Farm Show in Ontario, Canada, on September 10, 2002, where they met with four cattle handling equipment manufacturers and observed demonstrations of those handling systems. Six farmers participated in this tour.

As the producers began to compile materials needed for making handling facilities, it became apparent that fence posts were an item that the group could purchase together to reduce the individual cost to each person. A tractor trailer-load of posts was ordered for seven different producers at a substantial savings to the group. A paid laborer was also hired to help construct facilities.

Of the thirteen farms that participate in the Seneca County beef discussion group, seven were directly involved in improving their cattle handling systems. An additional fifteen farms requested written materials on cattle handling systems, designs, and layout. Two grant-purchased reference books were sent to those farms building a facility.

The Seneca County beef discussion group gave input into the original grant idea and remained active throughout the project with meetings, farm visits, and collaborative efforts among its members. Five producers gave an oral evaluation to the larger Seneca County group regarding the impact of this project on their farms.

The discussion group concept worked very well because producers were centrally located in an area that allowed convenient local meetings. Producers recommended cost-sharing of materials in future projects and would like to see other related components developed, such as fencing and water.

Walt Prouty, Seneca County producer, said, "The meetings helped me very much in developing my system and my veterinarian likes working here much more now." Other comments related to the value of learning from other farmers and garnering the shared knowledge of the group.

As a result of the cattle handling systems project, eight farms have made improvements to their cattle handling systems, ranging from equipment modifications to improve cattle flow to building a brand-new facility from scratch. Five additional farms are in the planning phase and will build or renovate their systems this coming spring. A spring beef tour is planned to tour the participating sites and to talk with producers about the improvements they made. There is considerable ongoing interest by farmers in cattle handling facilities.

Wright was very pleased with the results of this project and would like to continue her efforts on an even larger scale.

"I believe this project was very successful in achieving the desired outcomes, and this project could serve as a model for efforts across the state. The key to success is the discussion group format for meetings, where producers encourage each other in moving forward on making plans and setting up work days."

As she moves forward, Wright has identified what has worked and what needs to be improved for the future success of her work. "The challenges of this project include the time limitations that farmers face in making desired improvements and the financial outlay for materials."

Wright plans to continue consulting with those producers who are in the process of building cattle handling facilities. She has been compiling resources on cattle handling and will continue to act as a resource person for anyone interested in this topic. In the future, Wright plans to apply for additional grants to expand this collaborative working model across the state.

Massachusetts Grazier Focuses On 'Quality Of Life'

Dan Demaine
Cornell Coop. Extension
Cortland County

January 13-18 was an exciting week for New York dairy farmers who use pasture. A series of dairy grazing conferences were conducted across the state. The conferences were made possible through funding provided by the Cornell Small Farms Program, the New York Pasture Association, and the New York Grazing Lands Conservation Initiative. They took place in six different locations so that nearly every New York farmer was within an hour and a half of one of the meetings.

The conferences featured two well-respected farmers as keynote speakers, David Surprenant from Illinois and Larry Shearer from Massachusetts. Both were enthusiastically received by the audience for their practical knowledge and willingness to share their own experiences. In addition, each of the meetings included other presentations that were of specific interest to farmers in the local area. In this article, I'll discuss Larry's presentation.

Larry has been recognized as an outstanding farmer by the Northeast Sustainable Agriculture Research and Education Program, and serves as a "Farmer-Educators" for NESARE. His presentation detailed his long experience in the dairy industry and the changes he has made to his business through the years to meet his family's goals.

Larry's father bought the family farm in 1929, the year Larry was born. At that time it included both an apple orchard and a small dairy herd. Larry studied horticulture at the University of Massachusetts and expected to take over the apples, but, instead, his father turned over management of the dairy to him after he graduated.

After managing the dairy operation as an employee of his father for more than 10 years, Larry told his father that he wanted to either buy the family farm or move to another farm. At the time, he was married and had three children and was ready to be on his own. His father sold him the farm for $30,000, which was half the assessed value, and Larry set about changing the farm to suit his needs.

Private Well Maintenance Recommended

Spring Is A Good Time of Year For Annual Well Check-up

HARRISBURG (Dauphin Co.) — Acting Secretary of the Department of Environmental Protection (DEP) Kathleen McGinty reminds Pennsylvanians with private drinking water wells that spring is a good time to make sure wells are in proper working order, and to have well water tested.

"Now that the winter snows have melted, it is a good time to check in and around wells to make sure everything is OK," Acting Secretary McGinty said. "It is also a good idea to have well water tested once a year, and it is easy to make testing your water a spring-cleaning routine."

Properly constructed private water supply systems require only a little routine maintenance. These simple steps will help to protect your health, well system and investment:

- Be aware of changes in your well, the area around your well, or the water it provides.

An annual water test, including a bacterial test, is recommended. But drinking water should be checked any time there is a change in taste, odor or appearance, or anytime a water supply system is serviced.

Contact a DEP regional office for a list of commercial certified drinking water laboratories in Pennsylvania, or look up "water testing" or "laboratories" in the yellow pages of the telephone listings.

- Always use licensed or certified water well drillers and pump installers when a well is constructed, a pump is installed or the system is serviced. Keep hazardous chemicals, such as paint, fertilizer, pesticides and motor oil, far away from your well.
- Periodically check the well cover or well cap on top of the casing (well) to ensure it is in good repair.
- When landscaping, keep the top of your well at least one foot above the ground. Slope the ground away from your well for proper drainage.
- Take care in working or mowing around your well. A damaged casing could jeopardize the sanitary protection of your well. Don't pile mulch, leaves or other materials around your well.
- Keep records on your well, and keep them in a safe place. These include the construction report as well as the annual water well system maintenance and water testing results.
- When your well has come to the end of its serviceable life (usually an average of 30 years), have a qualified water well contractor properly decommission your well after constructing your new system.

Because spring is also a time of year when flooding can occur in Pennsylvania, residents should be prepared to clean and disinfect drinking water wells following a flood. Directions for disinfecting wells and springs, along with other flood cleanup tips, can be found on the state's Website, PA PowerPort, at www.state.pa.us, PA Keyword: "DEP flood recovery."

Other tips on private water well drilling and maintenance can also be found on the state's site, PA Keyword: "DEP private wells."

GREAT BALING STARTS HERE
Variable Open-Throat Power In-Feed System Here's how it works The incoming crop is pulled off the pick-up by the aggressive action of two power in-feed rolls – a 6-inch-diameter pivoting power in-feed roll on top and and 8-inch diameter fixed power in-feed roll on the bottom

The top pivoting power in-feed roll rides over the crop as it is pulled into the bale chamber An extension spring keeps the toproll under constant downward force

The spring tension increases as the variable throat opens from a minimum of 3/4 of an inch up to a maximum opening of nearly 7 inches The constant downward force of the pivoting upper powered in-feed roll, in combination with the fixed lower in-feed roll, both turning inward, pinches the crop and forces it into the bale chamber The stripping roll strips crop off the belt and forces it down to the incoming crop Adjustable scrapers on the stripping roll and pivoting roll eliminate buildup One Only

Montgomery County Farms To Show Water Quality Improvements

PENNSBURG (Montgomery Co.) — Spring Mountain Farm and Pointe of View Farm in Montgomery County will open their farms Saturday, April 26, to show changes they made to improve their farm operations and to protect the headwaters of the Perkiomen Creek Watershed.

Farmers and other interested individuals are invited to visit both farms and to see first hand the improvements made that will result in cleaner water for the region.

This agricultural-oriented tour offers several benefits to attendees. First, to see examples of Best Management Practices (BMPs) that can be used on livestock farms that can improve a farmer's livestock operation while also protecting streams, wetlands, and other environmentally sensitive areas from nutrient and sediment pollution. Second, to provide an opportunity to meet the organizations and agencies that assisted these farmers and would be available to assist with similar projects on other farms in the region. Another is to learn about Pennsylvania's Nutrient Management Law.

Finally, to hear about cost-sharing opportunities to assist with the installation of these BMPs.

The tour will begin at 9:15 a.m. at Spring Mountain Farm just outside of Gilbertsville. Spring Mountain Farm is owned and operated by Charlie Warnick and his family. It is a 60-acre preserved farm specializing in beef cattle and horses.

Visitors will be able to see the improvements made to the barnyard area to provide for better handling and controlling of animal manure. Previously manure was stockpiled on an earthen area just outside the barn. From the piles, nutrient laden water ran directly into a small stream. Also a stabilized stream crossing was installed at the farm. The crossing now allows the animals to cross the soft mud bottomed stream without getting stuck and protects the streambank vegetation.

At 10:30 a.m., the tour will proceed to Pointe of View Farm in East Greenville. Tour participants will meet with Rob and Val Myers who operate a 55-acre farm, which is also permanently preserved. The Myers raise beef cattle and sheep.

To protect the soil and water resources on their farm, the Myers installed a gravity fed watering system and a stone-stabilized stream crossing for their animals. Previously the animals concentrated grazing to one area and stayed close to the house because of limited access to drinking water. By providing drinking water in the pasture fields, the animals will now graze more of the pasture fields, be more efficient in grazing, and will have adequate water available for their drinking needs.

Spring Mountain Farm and Pointe of View Farm both benefited from funding received by the Southeastern Pennsylvania Resource Conservation and Development (SEPA RC&D) Council. SEPA RC&D was able to help Spring Mountain Farm with the barnyard improvement because of generous funding received from the Pa. Department of Environmental Protection (DEP) Growing Greener Program. The funding received by SEPA RC&D is targeted specifically to improve water quality around livestock barnyards.

SEPA RC&D was also able to assist both farms with their stabilized stream crossings because of funding received from PA DEP through Section 319 of the Federal Clean Water Act that is administered by the US EPA. The 319 funds were also used to assist Point of View Farm with their livestock watering system.

Ducks Unlimited, another project partner, aided Point of View Farm by providing and installing the fencing along the stream banks.

While both farms will benefit from the improvements made on their farm, so too will thousands of people and businesses in the region that will have cleaner water available for a variety of uses. Both farms are located on small tributaries to the Perkiomen Creek, which flows into the Green Lane Reservoir and into the Schuylkill River. The Philadelphia Suburban Water Company and the Philadelphia Water Department also benefit because they rely on the reservoir and river to provide drinking water to their customers.

At the tour, April 26, attendees will be able to meet with representatives from a variety of agencies and organizations. In attendance will be David Schaffer of the Natural Resources Conservation Service (NRCS), who assisted both farmers by providing engineering services and overseeing the installation of the Best Management Practices; Andrew Frankenfield of the Montgomery County Cooperative Extension Service, who assisted the farmers by providing information on proper pasture management and livestock grazing; and Bill Domenico of the Montgomery County Conservation District, who assists farmers with meeting the current Pennsylvania Nutrient Management Law.

Also attending will be Elizabeth Emlen, who is the administrator for the Montgomery County Farmland Preservation Program and John Metrick, who assisted the farmers with the Southeastern Pennsylvania Resource Conservation and Development Council project funding efforts.

For more information about the tour and driving directions to the farms, please contact Andrew Frankenfield of the Montgomery County Cooperative Extension at (610) 489-4315.

50 Cows, 50 Years

Larry's first move as owner of the farm was to improve the labor efficiency to ease the physical demands of farming and improve the family's quality of life. He toured a few free stall barns with milking parlors in Maine and Connecticut and built the first new set up of its kind in Massachusetts for 50 cows. The free stall and parlor were important to Larry because it reduced the physical toll on a bum right knee that had been injured in a motorcycle accident. It also allowed the farm chores to be done by one person in a reasonable amount of time.

After a few years working alone on the farm, Larry decided he needed a hired man so that he could get more time off with his family. The labor efficient setup meant that Larry and the hired man alternated weekends with one of them having from Friday night though Monday morning completely off.

Larry decided to begin grazing on his farm to further reduce the labor needs. In the early 1980s, he was green-chopping forage for the cows during a particularly wet spell. After the chopper had plugged up several times in one day, he decided the cows could just as easily harvest the forage as he could. He had read a few articles about rotational grazing a turned a hay field near the barn into pasture. He had such good luck the first year, he decided to turn another field into pasture and has been grazing ever since.

The next transition for the farm was sparked by Larry's son's experience managing the farm one summer. Larry and his wife took a two-month vacation a drove across the county the summer of 1988 and left the management of the farm to his 18-year-old son. When they returned, Larry's son informed him that he was not interested in taking over the farm because he didn't want to be tied down. Larry had heard about seasonal calving from a few magazine articles and decided to try it to see if two months off from milking would make his son more interested in taking over the farm.

For a few years, they researched it and slowly got the cows and heifers to start calving in the spring window they were aiming for. In 1990, they went seasonal and had the best year ever for the farm because they had 30 extra springing cows and heifers to sell. Since then, they have shortened their calving window from 8 to 6 weeks and have continued to have some extra cows to sell every year. Larry turned the farm over to his son in 1995.

According to Larry, seasonal calving has allowed the farm to focus their management. All of the cows are in the same stage of lactation, which means that they can be fed the appropriate feed more easily. In particular, Larry says they noticed a big improvement in their fresh cow health owing to a better focus on their dry cows' needs.

Seasonal calving also is beneficial in calf-raising. They raise the first 20 calves born in the spring and feed them either milk or milk replacer in mob feeders outside. They have found that calfhood illness has been almost totally eliminated because calves are only around for a few months of the year and then the facilities are empty for the rest of the year, which breaks the disease cycle.

At breeding age, the heifers are synchronized with two shots of lutalase and then bred on standing heat for three days. This results in 80 percent of the heifers being bred and a clean up bull takes care of the remainder. The lutalase treatment has not worked as well for the cows, which are bred artificially for three weeks and then bulls are turned in to catch the remaining open cows.

Since adopting grazing, Larry has been breeding for cows more suited to pasture. Larry believes that a smaller cow is better adapted to grazing and seasonal calving. After his first few years grazing, he began selecting sires that were below average in stature and above average in percentage components for his registered Holsteins.

More recently, Larry has experimented with cross-breeding with Jerseys and has been quite happy with the results. While they do not produce as high components as he had been expecting, the Jersey crosses have been about equal milk production to the Holsteins and seem to breed back more easily. Larry is planning on following the advice of Dr. Steve Washburn, a professor at North Carolina State doing research on cross-breeding, to continue crossing Holsteins and Jerseys back and forth to maintain at least 25% of each breed in each cross. The herd currently averages 16-17,000 pounds of milk sold per cow per year on a ration of eight to 15 pounds of grain, 20 pounds of corn silage, and 20 to 30 pounds of pasture or grass silage or hay.

One of the latest influences in Larry's thinking about pasture-based dairy farming was a trip he took to Ireland in 1998. The trip was put together by the Stockman Grassfarmer. Larry was impressed by the grazing management and labor efficiency on the Irish dairies they toured. He became convinced that the intensive grazing they practice — concentrating 70-80 cows on a one-acre paddock for 12 hours — leads to better pasture utilization and regrowth.

He was also impressed by the labor efficiency on Irish dairies. Larry described a 120-cow dairy run by a husband and wife where the wife set up the parlor, milked the cows and cleaned up in just an hour. That dairy had a swing 12 parlor and most of the dairies had fairly large parlors, by our standards, that allowed them to milk the cows in a short amount of time.

Upon returning from the trip, Larry has intensified the pasture management on the farm. Now cows are turned into a paddock at six inches tall and paddocks are grazed on eight to 12 days of rest. This has resulted in a change in the pasture species from mainly orchardgrass to mainly Kentucky bluegrass and white clover. Larry believes the intense grazing has led to less forage wasted by the cows and alleviated weed problems.

A third of the grazing acreage had been seeded in 1997 to perennial ryegrass and Larry is quite happy with the results. There has been no winter-kill and the ryegrass seems to do well under the intense management Larry is practicing.

Larry's thoughtful approach to farming has allowed the farm to remain at 50 cows and achieve the quality of life that he and his family desire. Along the way, he has been an early adopter of several cutting edge practices that have worked well for him in part because they met his criteria for both profitability and lifestyle.

Check For Mites

mouthpart into the cell and draws out the cell contents, leaving a shrunken cell. It then moves to another cell and continues feeding. Very rapidly, the plant displays a "rolled" characteristic that is very similar to drought stress. The tip-off to an infestation is the droughty symptom in April or May when adequate soil moisture is available.

Severe mite infestations have two negative impacts. Severe feeding causes substantial yield losses. Yield loss estimates range from 30 to 70 percent. Severe feeding has resulted in stressed stands that are not able to withstand extreme summer growing conditions, especially droughts and high temperatures. A second impact of the mite is related to forage quality. Under high mite pressures, the hay cures with a brownish discoloration. This off-color makes horse producers reluctant to pay top dollar.

Research is continuing into alternative control methods. There is some thinking that extremely low cutting in late fall discourages population build-ups during the winter. Initial results do not show any advantage to clipping timothy in the fall for mite control.

Investigation studies into possible timothy variety resistance were also established in Maryland and Pennsylvania. Results from one year of data collection showed no variety preference or rejection by the mites. All varieties were affected by the mites. Controls

There are no "natural" enemies of this pest, primarily due to the fact that it develops during winter and is dormant during the summer. A supplemental label use, called a "24 ©" was granted for Pennsylvania timothy producers to use Sevin XLR as a temporary solution for the cereal rust mite in 2001. Label directions call for the use of two to three pints per acre of Sevin XLR with adequate carrier for complete coverage of the timothy, a minimum of 20 gallons/acre (25 gal./acre is preferred).

Treatment is recommended approximately three to four weeks after green-up to fields with a past history of mite infestation or when 25 percent of plant tillers exhibit curled tips. Application is restricted to one time per cutting and must be made at least 30 days prior to harvest.

Follow all application directions and safety requirements. Many growers have included broadleaf herbicides and nitrogen fertilizer in their applications. Be sure not to apply too much nitrogen or too little carrier. Stick with 25 gallons/acre of a carrier of water and liquid N.

Note that Sevin controls the mite by coming into contact with these small critters. This is the reason that high rates of carrier are needed for optimum control.

Shown is a stand of good timothy exhibiting no infestations of mites, as evidenced by the leaves being open in appearance.

BALEWRAPPER

The Tube-Line Balewrapper gives you the power of control. Everyone knows the biggest enemies to baling hay are time and weather. The Tube-Line Balewrapper helps eliminate your dependence on the weather, saves you time and ensures you get the best quality forage.

High quality feed can now be made with a low investment in equipment. Forage is cut, wilted, baled and wrapped air tight with the Tube-Line Balewrapper. This eliminates the 2-4 days of drying time or expensive silo equipment.

Because the Tube-Line Balewrapper wraps the bales in a continuous line, only the outside circumference of each bale is wrapped. This saves up to 40% of the film used to wrap individual bales, and saves time when unwrapping. The Tube-Line Balewrapper also gives you hydraulic control of the film overlap letting you decide how much to protect your bales.

Time is the other enemy when trying to collect forage. The Tube-Line Balewrapper will wrap up to two bales per minute. And various options are available to match the speed of wrapping to your needs. This frees up your time and allows more time for forage growth. There is a Tube-Line Balewrapper available to fit your needs. From round to square, one Tube-Line Balewrapper is all you need.
